CONAN DOYLE DIGES PRINCE WITH DEATH ORDER

Charges Rupprecht With Having ing Prisoners Shot.

BEAT SOME TO DEATH

"THE STORY OF BRITISH PRISONERS" IS A Terrible Arrangement Upon German Testimony—Prisoners Were Burned to Death.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle writes in his preface and compiled the "Story of the British Prisoners," recently published by the National Patriotic Organization, and sets forth that Prince Rupprecht, Bavaria is responsible for the deaths of thousands of British prisoners.

In regard to the execution of prisoners by the Germans, the author writes: "Following despatch, dated the 28th, has been received from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs from Sir Alan Johnston, Majesty's Minister at The Hague, copies of declarations by the editor of the Rotterdam 'Nieuwsblad,' and N. J. van Dittmar, correspondent, of Rotterdam, regarding the shooting of British prisoners by the German troops in the Netherlands. The British Consul General at Rotterdam, on April 26th, writes: 'I, Johannes March, born the Rotterdam, on the 16th of March, 1870, son of K. J. March, declare that on the morning of the 16th of March, a certain Rupprecht, German deserter, member of the 18th Regiment, and made the following statement: He began by calling the British soldiers 'Schweins' (hogs), with their hands up and their arms raised, and also of shooting them down.'

Forty British Prisoners Burned.

"He stated that Rupprecht had received orders to make no distinction between British prisoners who were severely punished and those who were not. About forty British prisoners were burned alive in a hangar, and that this order was only directed against British prisoners and not exclusively in the Netherlands. This interview was published in the Rotterdam 'Nieuwsblad' on March 18th and 19th.

Another British Soldier.

"I made inquiries regarding the death of British prisoners, and on the 18th another German deserter, Rupprecht, was a certain Rupprecht, born at Ludwigs, Bavaria, 22 years old, belonging to the Twenty-second Regiment, Company, Third Machine Gun of the Second Bavarian Corps. This man struck me as an essentially stupid creature, and it was impossible to have sufficient intelligence to have the following thrilling story: he was pro-German and anti-English and gave the following account to my questions and not his own initiation.

Five British Soldiers.

"When asked whether they were German soldiers, he said they were not, but they were British soldiers, but killing them was their duty. He had formal orders to kill every prisoner of war. The following were his exact words in German: 'Wir hatten Befehl, sämtliche gefangene Engländer zu tödnen.' I cross-examined him on the subject, but his statement, and said that he had shot five British prisoners a few days before he deserted.

Another British Soldier.

"The following day, March 19th, another deserter came to see me, August Kahlmann, born at Karthaus (near Danzig), 25 years old, and belonging to the Thirty-fifth Regiment Infantry, Fifth Company, Seventh Division. His statement was practically identical, viz., to the effect that an order, signed by Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria, had ordered the whole Bavarian Army to take no prisoners, but to take no British prisoners in future, and that all had to be shot. He stated that they were brought to the quarters with their hands bound behind their backs, and with bandaged eyes, and that they were not told they were to be shot. They were executed under the supervision of the commanding officer. I asked him if there were any wounded among them, and he answered that nearly all were wounded, and that as long as a British soldier is able to fight he will not surrender. This interview was published in the Rotterdam 'Nieuwsblad' on March 22nd, and with the same blank as before. Both Kuller and Kahlmann stated that they did not approve of the order very much, and that they were quite aware that Bavarian prisoners were not treated out his reappearance. The German Consul told me over the telephone, in reply to an inquiry, that Friedrich Kuller had never called at that office."

Conan Doyle's observations.

Sir Arthur cites other instances of German mistreatment of British prisoners of war and wounded British soldiers.

"The conduct of the Germans to our wounded upon the field," he says, "has been on a par with their brutality to their British prisoners. At the battle of Festubert upon December 19th, 1914, when the Germans temporarily occupied some British trenches, an officer described the conduct of his men in this fashion: 'The sight of the trenches and the fury—not to say the bestiality—of our men in beating to death the wounded English affected me so much that for the rest of the day I was fit for nothing.'

The writer of this was in the Thirtieth Regiment, Thirtieth Division of the Seventh German Corps. His testimony as to the brutality of our enemy is borne out by the evidence of our own men on numerous occasions, notably at Neuve Chapelle, where several of our wounded, temporarily left behind, were subsequently found bayoneted or with their brains blown out.

Another extract from a letter referring to this same fight on Dec. 19, mentions that some of the English, being surrounded, surrendered after a most gallant resistance. The writer adds: 'But they got no mercy! The rifle butts were turned around and made the sparks fly. Prisoners were not taken.'

"Perhaps it is as well," Sir Arthur observes, "that prisoners should not be taken, for it means the slow torture of the German jailers. But it can be wondered that an ugly spirit is beginning to rise among the Allies—and that men's hearts are hardened at the thoughts of what their friends have undergone? If we do not turn to the whole world to who is the prime mover in shocking a release from all that is chivalrous and honorable in warfare."

The Kaiser's Sneer.

The strained relations between the Queen of Italy and the Kaiserin no doubt had something to do with the hastening of Italy into the war. Victor Emmanuel's cohort has never forgotten the sneer of the German Empress when she married Italy's King. The Kaiserin had seen her sister, but Victor Emmanuel would have nothing to do with any German princess, and married Princess Helene of Montenegro, to the Kaiserin's intense chagrin.

HINTS FOR KEEPING FOOD IN SUMMER.

Warm Weather Affects Coffee, Tea, Nuts, Spices, Sugar and Other Things.

With the advent of warm weather, when foodstuffs are likely to spoil quickly unless they receive proper attention, many housekeepers will be interested in hints for the care of grocery stock recently issued by a wholesale grocer's exchange to retail patrons; because much of the advice is quite as applicable to the home as to the store.

All housekeepers understand the perishable character of eggs, butter, meat, fruit, etc., and the care necessary for their preservation; but many do not realize that groceries generally can deteriorate greatly through so simple an error as storage in the wrong side.

Canned goods are the least perishable of groceries. All that is necessary is to place them where they will be free from dampness and where the air will circulate among the cans.

Housewives are advised to buy cereals in package form and never more than a month's supply at a time. All cereals should be kept in a cool dry place. They should not be placed near stoves or steam pipes. If these are in use. Dampness, too, must be avoided.

As roasted coffee loses much of its flavor after being exposed to the air, the use of an airtight receptacle is as necessary as in the case of ground coffee.

Raisins and currants—in fact, all dried fruits—lose much of their moisture when exposed to the air, becoming dry and hard. It is recommended that these fruits, as well as figs, dates, candied fruit, cocoa and chocolate, be kept in a cool place and away from strong sunlight.

Nuts in the shell demand a cool spot. Shelled nuts are extremely perishable. If exposed directly to the sun, the heat will draw out the oil and the nuts will become rancid. They must be kept almost airtight. Olives need coolness, and olive oil must be protected against strong light and heat. Peanut butter should be kept away from the sun. When left on a shelf for some time the oil often separates from the mass of butter. When this occurs the jar should be turned upside down, and the butter then will absorb the oil again.

Pickles should be covered to keep out a tiny insect called the vinegar fly. This fly will deposit its eggs among pickles, causing a noticeable worminess in a few days.

The deteriorates in either a heated or a damp place, through evaporation or absorption of moisture; therefore, a cool place of even temperature should be selected for the tea caddy.

Spices, having a tendency to weaken with age, should be purchased in small quantities.

Sugar will keep well in a dry place. It absorbs moisture quickly, and when this is dried out the sugar becomes very hard and lumpy, which is inconvenient and troublesome.
