Guarding her own soll and people against an invasion, which, if it came-and it is believed to be far from impossible-doubtless would be the most savage, the most unsparing, ever known. With how many men? Well, with enough. To hear some people talk, one would suppose that upon Britain were laid the duty of defending every land but her own.

Britain's wealth and sea power and military power are the one sure safeguard against the triumph of Germany's unparralleled war machine. Without Britain's help France and Russia certainly must have been crushed. Without Britain's wholehearted participation in the war, who will say that Italy would have ventured to challenge the mighty and merciless Germanic coalition? With Britain out of the struggle, would there have been any hope of the Baikan-States daring to move?

And Britain-never forget it-was it well wooded and nicely situ- not compelled to go to the aid of France. Come what might, the most that ever Britain promised France were six divisions-120,000 men. MILITIA COMPANY (Continued from Page 9.) afterwards the English taking up the movement may be attributed to my successful initiative.

Dr. Smythe Leaves Brockville. Upon the raising of the 100th Roy al Canadians, Capt. Smythe was among the first to be selected to carry out its formation, on account of the wide experience which he had received. He raised a company for service in the regiment and was gazetted to its command. Upon leaving Brockville in June, 1858, to join his regiment, the Rifle Company which owed its existence to his initiative and its efficiency to his energy and attention, was paraded un-J-Just think of W. G. Bryan, too, der the command of Captain James Crawford, after Lt.-Col. Crawford, M. P., and an address from the off cers and men of the company and from numerous other residents of the town presented to him together with a purse containing $200 in gold. Af terwards the company marched to the railway depot, where Captain Smythe passed along and shook each man by the hand. In his reply to the address, he referred at some length to the organization and development of the corps: "Your appearance today," he said, "is worthy of the reputation you have earned, and I feel pride in the reflection that much of your soldier-like appearance and discipline is owing to a ready acquies-Gazetted to a captaincy in the 100th, June 29th, 1858, Captain Smythe accompanied the regiment to England, and subsequently served with it at Gibraltar, Malta," and in Canada, England, Ireland, Scotland and India. In 1872 he was promoted major, becoming in 1878 lieutenant-colonel, and in 1881 a full colonel. Shortly following his lastnamed promotion, Colonel Smythe was compulsorily retired under the age clause and took up residence in England where he spent the rest of his life. He was the last to leave the 100th of the forty-four officers appointed to the regiment on its for-cence and obedience to all my orders

mation. He died at Belgrave Garden, Dover, August 24, 1906. While an officer of the 100th, Colonel Smythe earned universal commendation for the energetic and faithful manner in which he carried out the duties assigned to him. Did Duty On Frontier. Although deprived of an opportunity to see active service at the time of the Indian Mutiny, the Brockville Rifle Company did defence duty along the frontier when interest in the Fenian Raid scare was at fever heat. For several months in 1864 the company under Capt. Crawford was on duty at Amherstburg, forming No. 3 Company of the First or Western Administrative Battalion, with headquarters at Windsor. Other officers accompanying the corps were Lieut. W. H. Cole and Ensign Edmund W. Windeat. In the spring of 1856, the members of the company returned to Brockville where in the succeeding year they did picket duty in the streets on news of a reported raid from across the border. The men were kept on active service for three weeks. In July, 1866, the trouble broke out afresh and on a general call to arms being sounded, the Rifles were assigned to patrol duty along the St. Lawrence Canals with headquarters at Cornwall. Although no trouble was encountered, the men were rigidly drilled and a strict military discipline maintained Some months later-on October 1866, to be precise-the 41st Brock ville Battalion of Rifles was formed under the command of Lieut.-Col. James Crawford. Into this organization the old Rifle Company was amalgamated with ther existing companies in Gananoque, Perth, Merrickville, Carlton Place and Pakenham.
