CHLORINE GAS EASY TO MAKE.

Any Manufacturing Chemist Can Make Enough in a Day To Kill Army. Whether we are justified in copying the German example in regard to the use of asphyxiating gases is a matter on which the British Army will soon give an answer to the Huns in the field. It is interesting to note that there is no difficulty about producing chlorine gas—which is that mainly employed by the Germans—and discharging it at the enemy's trenches when the wind is favorable. Any British manufacturing chemist could produce enough chlorine in a day or two to suffocate the whole German Army from the Yser to the Vistula, for chlorine is familiar to English chemical manufacturers, who, until a few years ago, were the only makers of this chemical.

Chlorine is a greenish-yellow gas with a peculiarly unpleasant and suffocating smell, and with those terrible effects on the lungs, throat, and membranes of its victims which have been described by Dr. Haldane and Sir John French. The cost of suffocating our troops by the Germans is not heavy. Liquid chlorine costs about £25 a ton, containing 170 gallons, and this will produce a large volume of deadly gas. It is interesting to note that the idea of "gassing" an enemy was suggested nearly half a century ago by four Frenchmen, but at that time it was thought that the invention was too horrible to be allowed in field operations, although it was agreed that it might be used by small storming parties at close quarters, when the gasses might be compressed in shells and bung by catapult. According to "Truth," however, the invention came to nothing.

Surprise Came Last. A man who was something of a gourmet ordered a dinner for himself and his party which, from the menu, should have been very palatable, but apparently it was not so. Course succeeded course, and toward the end of the meal the host could restrain himself no longer. He called up the waiter, and expostulated: "I ordered a good dinner, and for some time have waited patiently, for some satisfactory dish. The soup was a failure, the fish was a disappointment, the entree unpalatable, and I am sorry to tell you that during the whole dinner there has been nothing worth looking at." The waiter looked troubled for an instant, and then brightening up said: "If you wait a moment, sir, I'll bring you the bill."

War munitions stocks in New York closed weak on Friday on rumors that peace negotiations are likely soon to take place. The Allied powers are asking Serbia to grant Bulgaria's terms in exchange for Bulgarian indemnity.

RELATION OF BALKANS TO EASTERN BATTLE LINE. The relation of the Balkan states to the eastern arena is daily becoming more important. The map shows the eastern battle line, the fluctuations of which are being watched by the statesmen of the Balkan nations, whose entrance into the conflict on the Allies' side would be of great value as shown on the map.

GERMAN LIAR IS WORKING OVERTIME. Amazing Untruths about Britain Manufactured to Deceive German People. The most amazing untruths concerning Great Britain are daily circulated in Berlin for the purpose of deceiving the German public into the belief that Great Britain is in a state of panic. Here are a few of these gems which make up in humor what they lack in veracity: "Sir John Jellicoe is to be tried for incapacity."

The organ of the Labor party demands that the whole Cabinet shall be impeached for participation in the war. "The Indian troops in France were told before leaving India that they were being taken to Europe for exhibition purposes."

Half of London is burnt down, and Zeppelins are always hovering over it. Plymouth has also been destroyed by fire caused by bombs from the air. "Mr. Asquith has fled from England, and is hiding in Ireland."

The citizens of London now hurry hither and thither like scared mice because their battalions of football-kicking loiterers are melting away before the fire of the German artillery. "Instead of biding their victims from the mouths of their guns as they did in the Indian Mutiny, the British now employ the truly humane and gently acting dum-dum bullets, with the approval of Lord Kitchener."

The French Government pays for the support of British troops, so that each man draws on a day on which there is no fighting four francs, while on each fighting day he is entitled to
