PT. NORMAN REYNOLDS

RETURNS FROM FRANCE AFTER NERVOUS BREAKDOWN.

Declared Unfit For Further Service—He Was Transferred To a Canadian Stationary Hospital.

Without notifying his parents that he was on the way home from the battlefield in France, Private Norman Reynolds, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Reynolds, 214 Nelson street, returned to the city on Tuesday.

Pte. Reynolds, when speaking to the Whig on Wednesday morning, stated that owing to over work in the hospital in France where he was stationed, he had a nervous breakdown and for that reason he was pronounced unfit for service.

He left Kingston last August with the Army Service Corps. When he arrived at Salisbury Plains, he was transferred to the No. 1 Stationary Hospital and went to France about the first of February where he remained until a few weeks ago when he appeared before the medical board and was found unfit for service.

Speaking about his experience since he left Kingston, he stated that the men who went over with the First Contingent would never forget the time spent at Salisbury Plain last winter. When the hospital unit crossed to France things were not quite so bad but the work was very heavy.

The hospital to which he was attached, was a short distance from Boulogne. Although there were some three hundred and fifty beds in this hospital, all of them were filled with British soldiers, who had been wounded while fighting in the trenches in France. When asked if he had seen any Canadian wounded, Pte. Reynolds stated that he had not, as this hospital was used for the British. At times it was almost impossible to find a place for the wounded as all the beds were occupied.

Although the hospital was situated some distance from the firing line, the sound of the cannon fire could be distinctly heard at all times. Practically all the patients treated recovered from the wounds they received, as the seriously wounded were not taken from the field hospitals as they might die on the way to the stationary hospital.

The hospital unit was in charge of Col. McKee, Montreal, who was highly spoken of by his men.

Pte. Reynolds spoke of being associated with Lionel Crawford, son of George Crawford, broom manufacturer of this city.

Nursing Sister Miss Emma Persse, daughter of the late E. J. B. Pense, was also attached to this hospital for some time, but was later transferred to another hospital. Pte. Reynolds spoke of her as being a hard worker.

A short time before he received his discharge Nursing Sisters Miss Grace Hisecock and Miss Abernethy, who went over with Queen's Stationary Hospital, were sent to the hospital at Boulogne. They did not remain for any time as the call came for the Queen's nurses to leave for the Dardanelles and both these ladies were recalled to England where they joined the Queen's Hospital.

Pte. Reynolds returned to Canada on the same steamer as Capt. J. C. Stewart, son of Postmaster Stewart. There were eight privates and one sergeant in the party. The non-commissioned officer in charge comes from Vancouver. He was badly wounded while fighting in France. Upon the arrival of the steamer at Quebec the soldiers were all given civilian clothes and railroad transportation for their homes. Each man will be given fifty dollars a month for three months. After that date it is not known what arrangements will be made.

When Pte. Reynolds arrived at Montreal he telegraphed his parents that he was on the way home but unfortunately they did not receive the message and when they opened the front door on Tuesday morning that was the first they knew that their son was coming home.

CHARGES NOT PROVEN

AGAINST JOHN COLLINS IN THE POLICE COURT.

Magistrate Stated That Picture Man Was Not Guilty of Getting Money Under False Pretences—His Action Not At All Criminal.

In the Police Court on Wednesday morning, Magistrate Farrell dismissed the charges of getting money under false pretences, preferred against John Collins, the picture agent.

"I think on the facts," said the Magistrate, "that as he would find Collins represented certain things. In one case he represented a painting to be delivered and that it would be in oil, but as a matter of fact it was not in oil. This does not constitute false pretences."

The Magistrate stated that on the promise that he would in the future deliver an oil painting, and that intended to deceive, was not criminal. If Collins had come to one of the women and said: "This is an oil painting," and received the money, then he would have been liable. To promise to do something in the future is not a false pretence, under the criminal code.

The Magistrate thereupon stated that he would dismiss the charges against the accused. Just one of the women with whom Collins had dealings with, was present to hear the Magistrate give his decision. Collins was not present. His lawyer, A. B. Cunningham, was in attendance, but on hearing the judgment of the Court had nothing to say.

William Mullinger wore out his welcome at the police station and was touched for $3 and costs with the option of twenty days. He was before the Court just a few days ago, for being drunk, and the Court reminded him of this fact. Mullinger mumbled something about being laid up with rheumatism and he left the room.

John Cleaver, an old man, who has been on remand many weeks, is being deported to his home in Uncle Sam's territory.

A Call For Kingston and Frontenac Men.

The officers of the 59th Battalion have placed a tent on the market square to be used for recruiting purposes. All applicants will be welcomed and will pass through the 14th P. W. O. There is a demand for men, and it is up to the citizens to aid as far as they can the laudable efforts of the battalion officers. "Your King and country need you," is still the call. If Canada is to remain British her sons must willingly sacrifice to make it so. Rally to the colors.
