THE FUTILE ZEPPELIN. .

It Has Proved of Scant Military Value In War.

New York World. A year of numerous Zeppelin raids on England has caused, according to Arthur J. Balfour, the death of eighteen children and seventy-one ivilian adults. "No soldier or sailor has been killed or even wounded," and only once has damage "of the smallest military importance" been inflicted. As to property loss, the costly and fragile Zeppelins have very likely suffered as much as they

The futility of the Zeppelin campaign, except to promote British recruiting, is fairly matched on the other side. The most famous air raid of the Allies, that upon Carlsruhe in June, served no military pur-By endangering the life of the Queen of Sweden it went far toward effacing the effect favorable to the Allies which had been produced five weeks earlier among the Swedish people by the gigantic German blunder of murdering 1,198 noncombatants on the Lusitania.

The aeroplane has taken the place of cavalry in scouting. It enables commanders to know something of what is going on beyond trench lines which no human cunning can pass at the earth level. It is useful to some extent in mussing up railway stations and munition depots behind the enemy's lines. But as a means of attack in the broader sense, all types of air craft have proved an utter failure, and when they are used to drop bambs on non-combatants they chiefly harm the cause they set out to

The newspaper's representative asserts he has been informed no one saw the approach of the British transports with convoys of warships or the landing of troops with artillery. The Germans are said to have declared that if German troops had been on watch not a single British soldier would have been able to land.

Princess Arthur is anxious to go to the front as a nurse, but nothing definite has been decided yet. In taking up nursing work, her Royal Highness is following the example of many of our Royal ladies, headed by the Queen and Queen Alexandra. It was the latter, indeed, who set the example in this direction. Among other duly qualified Royal nurses at the present time are the Princess Royal, Princess Victoria, Brincess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duchess of Argyll, Princess Henry of Battenburg, the Duchess of Connaught and her daughters, and the Duchess of Albany.
