DESCRIPTION OF WAR SCENES IN A FRENCH TOWN

isit To a Cemetery Where the Graves Of the Immortal Dead Are Beautifully Kept.

By Frederick C. Spurr. In the daytime the life of this French city differs little from what it was ordinarily before the war broke out. Within the barriers things move much as usual. Two or three things advertise the presence of some thing not quite normal. One is the presence of a mixed and numerous soldiery. British, French, and Belgian soldiers are found everywhere. While the men remained indoors and the city was plunged in darkness the Navy kept its unceasing vigil. - Hard by the Chateau, as we des cended, we beheld the silhouettes of two figures outlined against the sky. A moment later there rang out on the night air the full pure tenor voice of a Scotsman singing 'Annie Laurie'. We could not see the face of the singer, nor did he reply to our salutation, but he was. without doubt one of the many professional singers and musicians who have answered the call of their country. I turned into a number of the churches always to discover that they were crowded to the doors whenever service was announced. At o'clock on a Thursday morning one big church was filled. At eight o'clock on the same night it was packed. I looked in at various churches during the daytime and never failed to find scores and sometimes hundreds of people kneeling down to pray. There is no priest visible nor is any required. The people come in from market-place and shop for few moments to pray. They then resume their occupations. Before the war I am told the churches were incare about religion. All is now changed. A new spirit has come to France. The mass of fiction that has appeared during the last ten months with the "German spy" as its motif has nothing to compare with the revelations of Ignatius Timotheus Tribitch-Lincoln, once Jewish missionary in Montreal, later British M.P., later still a German spy in England, and now a fugitive in the United States.
