Mr. Kingsley expressed the belief that the peoples of Europe, as a result of the conflict that is devastating their countries, would learn the lesson that war must end and sovereignty ultimately surrender. 'We shall not, of course," he said, 'reach the ultimate goal at one Nicholas Timmerman has the various bound," but he felt that it was America's duty to act when the war ended. He suggested that the United States then should signify its willingness to meet representatives of all the considerable powers of the world in an international congress. A world state, modeled on our Federal Constitution, Mr. Kingsley said. might be a long way off, but a real beginning which might 'well result from the congress he proposed would a transcendent achievement.
