New York, Dec. 20 -- Wall Street read with much amusement a yarn emanating from Chicago that New pocket full of money in war stocks had lost their wad on the recent break in the wheat market of Chicago. The story was that these spculators had loaded up with wheat at the top of the recent bulge and had not correctly gauged the weakness of the market, with the result that they had been compelled to liquidate on the break of eight cents a bushel last week. If the truth were known, would probably be found that, far from playing a losing game in wheat, Wall Street got away with the long end of their deal and left some less ortunate ones holding the bag on the break. It is known that profits taken out of the Chicago wheat market by New York bulls on the recent advance ran into the millions of dollars. Individual operators, are understood to have taken down as much as 19 cents profit on their
