A GREAT INVENTION.

A German Has Invented An Electric Hand.

Berlin, Jan. 13 .- After years o experiment, Director Klingenberg, of the General Electric Company, has announced the perfection of an "electro-magnetic hand" with which it is possible to grasp even the heaviest metal objects and work with them as advantageously as with human hands.

Dr. Klingenberg, has evolved a unusually powerful battery which can be carried by the operator, making it unnecessary for him to be near; an electric current in order to magnetize the "hand." The invention, it said, can perform all the functions of the human hand and others be sides. The current is regulated by switch operated by hand or foot.

It is hoped that the invention will solve the problem of livelihood for many crippled' soldiers, enabling them to engage even in trades requiring considerable manual dexterity, such as carpentry. By its use the manipulation of knife and fork and similar instruments is a bagatel-
