Vancott was seriously burned on the limbs in a fire which broke out in their home early Saturday morning. The Vancotts were awakened about 2 a.m. by her cries, and H. Spencer, C. C. Mrs. Vancott had been awakened by the smoke, and on going into the parlor to see where the fire was falling through the hole which had been burned. Not being fully recovered from an attack of sciatica, she was severely burned before her clothes could be torn off. It was very fortunate that serious complications did not set in, as Mrs. Vancott stood in the road calling for help for some time after she was burned.

AUSTRALIAN TRACKERS.

The Blackfellow is the Greatest Tracker in the World. Wonderful stories of the doings of Australian aboriginals are told by Norman Duncan in his book "Australian Byways."

Our North American Indians had skill in following tracks, and reading signs of the wild. But the Blackfellow's tracks are simply unique in their uncanny ability.

One Australian in the South African war said so much of his followers' skill that:

"To his surprise and indignation, he found that he had exhausted the faith of the British officers with whom he was messing. He was challenged to a trial of the blackfellow's cunning, the conditions of which were these: that the five skeptical British officers, two apart, three ahead, should start at various intervals in whatever directions they might elect, for a period agreed upon; and that the tracker, knowing only the color of the horse that each mounted man rode, and having seen only the prints of the shoes which each footed his horse, should trace them all within a stipulated time. The officers were incredulous when they learned that they might take off their shoes, obscure their tracks, and search but the hardest ground to be found.

But the tracker turned out to be only contemptuously amused by all their artifices. He had followed the tracks of the mounted men at a run, identifying and distinguishing the movements of each by the colors of the horses, producing samples of the dark-brown hairs, light-brown hairs, and gray hairs which he found by the way.

In addition to this, he described intimately the incidents of their rides. The first horseman had dismounted and lighted his pipe; the second had been thrown while riding at a canter; the third had dismounted, rested in the shade, and climbed a tree for a view of the country.

Of the footmen, one had taken off his shoes, as a wisp of two of wood from his socks showed, and had later cut his foot. The officers agreed that they had lost their wager.

Mr. Duncan tells extraordinary stories of the trackers attached to the police stations of the outlands. One, for example, followed a horse thief from New South Wales to the northwestern wilds, over stony plain and through forest, amid rain and drought, until he caught him at the end of fifty-six days. Another picked up a fugitive's trail at once from a cupping a few grains of sand which he had thrown from his bare foot on a flat stone. Another tracked a criminal through the timber bush at a canter by means of the color of the leaves—the difference in light and shadow—though the white men with him could see nothing of the matter.

All this rises from the fact that the blackfellow is brought up in the desert, where the animals are small, and he needs to be cunning and diligent to get his daily food—rats, snakes, lizards, wallaby, and bandicoots. A blackfellow who must be able to track a rat over hard ground or starve, who can see the track of a bush mouse and know at a glance whether it is fresh enough to follow or not, can read the human footprints so much big type in the criminal courts of the blacklocks' native witness' identification of the tracks of the accused, generally speaking, has much the value of the testimony of an eye-witness.

"You savvy this fellow?"

"I savvy this fellow all right." "You savvy tracks mak-up by this fellow?" "I savvy tracks bin make, all right." This is conclusive.

The "Good Old Times."

If a modern workman could by any chance precipitate himself back into the "good old times" he would probably imagine that it was high time the status of laborers in the United States of laborers from 1349 to the time of Elizabeth, bound him to work within the lordship to which he belonged, and punished him for wandering beyond the limits of his wardenship or "Hundred." His hours of labor were long, and his remuneration was not only poor, but was made, at the option of his lord, either in coin or corn. Corn was taken to have a standard relative value, and when the harvest was scant and corn was dear, the man was paid in coin. Conversely, when corn was plentiful and cheap he was paid in corn, and the grain was often old and unsound.

For accepting more than the standard rate of pay the laborer stood to suffer punishment, while his lord could inform against him and pocket the illicit excess.

Under Elizabeth this policy, which was then outwardly, was revised and largely reversed, but by this time the spirit of unrest, which found expression in the Puritan revolt, was abroad, and laborers, so recently emancipated from serfdom, were beginning a movement spontaneously and personally, which in later ages was to result in the powerful combinations to which the name of trade unions has been given.

Christmas Cards.

Christmas cards are now known and in general use the world over, the first one originated in London, in the year 1845. In that year Rev. Edward Bradley, author of Verdant Green, had a printer make him some holiday cards from his own design, to send to his friends. Two years later the Newcastle printer put a number of cards which sold at 2 pence (4 cents) each.

How Australia Does It.

The spirit of the British Empire may be partially grasped from the fact that in the antipodean possessions, "Australia Day" recently netted $5,000,000 for war relief funds, when a tin whistle brought $120, a box of writing paper $125, and kisses, sold by blushing maids, varnish, and unreported sums.

A BIG FALL OF SNOW

STORM STRUCK KINGSTON DURING MONDAY NIGHT.

Interfered With Business in the Stores, But Steam and Electric Railways Managed to Keep Their Lines Open—First-class Sleighing Now.

The Storm King struck Kingston during Monday night, and as a result there was a very heavy fall of "the beautiful." The storm set in during the early morning hours, and between 7 and 8 o'clock, when citizens were on their way to work, the snowfall was very heavy.

Although a lot of snow fell, it was not of the heavy kind, and as a result it did not give the steam and electric railways the usual hard time. Perhaps the storm could be referred to as "a heavy fall of light snow." The Street Railway Company had its big broom early on the job, and although there was some task, managed to keep the line open. Trains were somewhat late in arriving in the city, but the time-table was not interfered with to any great extent up till noon.

The storm, however, affected the business in the city, and many did not care to venture outdoors were satisfied to stay at home and put off their shopping for another day. Telephone calls were the order of the day.

As a result of the fall of snow, there was splendid sleighing in the city and the country as well, as the Weather Man did not forget the country folk. This will mean that Kingston will have a big market on Saturday, for good sleighing always brings the farmers to the market. It was not very cold during the night. The lowest reading of the thermometer during the night was 8.8 above zero according to the official report.

Williamson Submarine Expedition.

These pictures have been the talk of the scientific and educational people of the United States for several months past, who headed by the Smithsonian Institute at Washington volunteered their endorsement of same. Dorothy Dix urges all parents to take their children to see it. The Scientific American, Popular Mechanics, Collier's Weekly, London News and in fact all the leading magazines and newspapers of America have written columns upon columns in commendation of these marvelous under the ocean pictures. The last word in moving picture sensation scientifically revealed by the most marvelous invention of the age. These pictures have shown elsewhere at prices as high as 75c to $1.00, but the management of the Strand adhering to their policy of one price always will present these truly remarkable pictures at the usual prices of admission viz: matinee 5c, evening 15c. At these prices there should not be a man, woman or child in Kingston who should miss seeing these truly eighth wonder of the world. At the Strand three days only, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

Don't Let Soap Spoil Your Hair

When you wash your hair, be careful what you use. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious to the hair, and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified coconut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes off every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.
