Attendance in House Small.

Amongst the members generally to-day a feeling of thankfulness prevails that the fire was not much more serious from the standpoint of loss of life. It was a quiet evening in the House, and there was but a small attendance of members. Only a few people were in the galleries. Had a full dress debate been under way, with crowded chamber and crowded galleries the loss of life would have been appalling. It was equally fortunate that the Senate was not in session. Although the flames did not reach the Senate end of the building until a late hour, it is probable that the members of the Upper House, who are advanced in years, would have experienced difficulty in finding their way out of the building.

Premier Borden stated at ten o'clock this morning that the Government had decided Parliament will continue its session in Victoria National Museum, about three-quarters of a mile from the site of the destroyed buildings. The House as constituted this afternoon will be a very democratic body. It will be shorn of all forms and ceremony.

At this moment it is not known whether the parliamentary mace was saved, but the probabilities are that it was left on the table of the House when the members made a rush for the exits.

Will Shorten the Session.

There is absolutely no doubt that the destruction of the Parliament buildings will shorten the session appreciably and have a settling effect on the political situation. Deprived of all their accommodations and conveniences, the members will not be disposed to remain in the Capital a day longer than is necessary. It is freely predicted this morning that the House will rise before the end of the month.

The Cabinet Council met at 10.15 a.m. to consider the situation, and Sir Robert Borden said he would make a formal statement when the House meets this afternoon.

It is believed that the bill to extend the parliamentary term for one year, necessary war measures, estimates and a small amount of pressing private legislation will constitute the parliamentary bill of fare. The prediction is also made this morning that any possibility there has been of a general election has passed away.

Smoke Rolled In.

Just as Mayor Martin rushed to the chamber, shouting "Fire!" a wall of smoke, heavy, black and choking, rolled into the big hall. It swept forward slowly like the billowing of the ocean on a calm day. But the members who sought to pierce it were staggered. Some ran to the lockers for their coats. Others fled countless and hatless. The Deputy Speaker, who was in the chair, and the Sergeant-at-Arms rushed to the exits where the members of the Parliamentary Press Gallery were escaping.

The smoke arose to the ceiling and filled the galleries. There were but few visitors in them. Half a dozen soldiers occupied the front boxes. The smoke overwhelmed them and hid them from view. Three of them fell as though shot. Their fellows converted their handkerchiefs into respirators and dragged them down the narrow stairs into the open air. The visitors in the galleries back of the soldiers have not been seen.

The soldiers and a few volunteers crept back to the galleries. But the smoke was as heavy as a blanket. A lantern was of no service. The electric lights could hardly be seen. The rescuers groped over the gallery floors. But they came rolling out into the air strangling and alone.

So heavy was the smoke that the flames were hidden away for many minutes. When finally a section of the great Gothic roof fell and the smoke found escape, the fire—crimson and roaring—lure along the walls and up the huge columns and staircases.

At 9.30, a half hour after the flames were discovered, the west side of the huge building was shaken apart by a terrific explosion. The long, leached roof arose like paper. And it crumpled like paper. From the roofless wing a solid column of fire, it seemed twenty feet in diameter, shot up volcano-like. It arose 100 feet. It was deep crimson, and with it arose the same dreadful, galling smoke that cut the throat and lugs like acid.

Speaker's Wife Saved.

Speaker Sevigny did not leave at the first alarm. He rushed back through the banks of dark smoke calling for Madame Sevigny, his wife. Somehow he found her. She was in one of the galleries. With his wife he appeared at a gallery window. Madame Sevigny appeared to have fainted. A fire net was spread below. The firemen and soldiers bowed their heads before the smoke. One or two collapsed. Blindly Mr. Sevigny leaped. His wife fell out of his arms, but both landed in the net. The half-choked men holding the net collapsed under the shock. Others appeared at the gallery windows. Fresh firemen took the net. Six or seven men leaped. All were saved.

When Madame Sevigny recovered sufficiently to speak she said that Madame Bray of Montreal and Madame Morin of Beauce, two of her friends, were still in the gallery. The Chamber by this time was a mass of flame, into which no one could penetrate and live. Search by the firemen resulted in the discovery of the bodies of Madame Bray and Madame Morin on a narrow stairway, clasped in each other's arms.

THEATRICAL NEWS

At the Grand.
One of the strongest bills of vaudeville and photoplays is being presented at the Grand Opera House. Last night the theatre was filled to capacity, and the large audience thoroughly enjoyed the excellent programme. "The Jungle Queen," showing the capture of wild animals in Africa, was first shown; next a comedy picture, "The Magic Mirror," then the Pathe News and the travel series of pictures. All were good. "The Eternal City," with Pauline Frederick in the title role, is the feature picture, and is the first of the photo-spectacles that are booked for appearance in Kingston at this popular theatre. The vaudeville part of the entertainment is excellent. Miss Juanita L. Fletcher rendered in excellent voice "Adoration" and "The Lane That Leads to Home Sweet Home." She was loudly applauded throughout. Musical Irving also was on the bill and made a big hit with his excellent playing on the trombone, "cello and one-string instrument. His imitations on the latter were well received and loudly applauded. The same bill will be shown to-night; Saturday afternoon and evening.

"Bringing Up Father."
A treat of unusual proportions is promised at the Grand on Monday, Feb. 7th, matinee and night, where the successful Cartoon comedy in three acts, "Bringing Up Father," is underlined to hold the boards. This merry concoction of mirth, melody and songs is based on the popular comics of George McManus, and is sponsored by Manager Gus Hill, whose name requires scant introduction to the followers of local theatricals. The play is out of the beaten path, and has been universally praised by critics all over the country, because of its original features, treatment of theme, catchy music, novelties, surprises and all around entertaining qualities. Dulness has not been permitted to find access into its ranks.

At the Strand.
The headline at the Strand Theatre last evening was that popular screen star and idol of the ladies, J. Wron Kerrigan, who is known and beloved by millions of people all over America. Mr. Kerrigan appeared in a fascinating 5-act photo-play novelty by that well-known writer, Meredith Nicholson, entitled "London's Legacy," one of the big story hits which appeared in the New Year's issue of Collier's Weekly. The Universal Weekly of latest current events and other photo-plays were all shown to a large and appreciative audience. The same bill will be given again to-night and at the Saturday matinee and evening shows. The management beg to announce the coming on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of that well-known international star, Miss Ethel Barrymore, who will be seen in "The Final Judgment," a 5-part Metro production by George Scarborough, author of "The Lure" and other well-known books.

At the King Edward.
"In the Enemy's Hands." This is a very humble position to be placed in, but if you will attend the King Edward Theatre to-night or Saturday, you will see the other fellow in the hands of the enemy. Usual admission. Watch for the "Diamonds from the Sky" coming February 14th and 15th.

Censuring the Censorship.
In his new book, "The Truth About the Dardanelles," Capt. Granville Fortescue, a noted English war correspondent, discusses the subject with first-hand knowledge. Read his conclusions in the Book Review column to-morrow. Read what he has to say about those in high places who hide their failures behind the curtain of censorship.
