THE TERM OF PARLIAMENT.

The speeches of the political leaders in Parliament, and in favor of the extension of the parliamentary term by a year, were masterpieces. Both Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wil-'xid Laurier were at their best. Sir Wilfrid excelled himself. He plainly intimated, but in the choicest and most persuasive language, that a difference of opinion existed in the Libshould be pursued. The issue had been remitted to him. He was asked to act according to his judgment. He had done so, and felt the great responsibility of it.
