BRITISH, EVERYONE.

Far and near is England calling To her true and gallant sons, To protect her mighty empire, Guard her weak and little ones. Eagerly they hear that summons, It shall never be in vain, While live loyal British subjects Her fair honor to maintain.

Quickly rally England's soldiers,-Prime of manhood, tender youth, Cheerful servants of their country. Standing for honor and truth; Fired with lofty ambition. Ready to suffer and fight, Ready to die for their country, Ready to die for the right.

The foe may stoop to dishonor, A mean advantage to gain— May stoop to audacious cunning. A victory soon to attain, Our army glories in honor. And each of our men, at test,

Would scorn to be less than British, Scorn to do less than his best. When they bravely win the victory,

May the conquest then avail To teach evil, warring nations The might of right to prevail England is proud of her heroes. Proud of her empire's scope;
