

SAPPERS AT WORK, UNDER GERMAN LINES, AT VERDUN.
A party of French sappers who are at work placing time fuses on the mines which have been under German lines at Verdun.

SPECIAL PHOTOS OF THE FIGHTING IN THE REGION OF VERDUN.
Japanese officers in French uniforms, observing the operations of the French army now fighting in Verdun.

Thousands of tons of wheat are stacked on the pier in Australia, awaiting shipment to Great Britain and France.

FIRST PHOTO OF THE RUSSIAN CZAR, ON THE GALICIAN FRONT.
Showing the Czar, in the car of the plane, inspecting one of the new giant Russian biplanes, which has made a successful flight on which it carried thirty-two passengers. The biplane is of the Sikorsky type.

The sentinels shielded by plates with a cunningly made roof to shield them from being seen by aeroplanes. (Centre photo.)

A TRENCH FOR HORSES, ON THE MACEDONIAN FRONT.

To keep horses from wandering away to look for a grazing place, where there is none, the French artillerymen have devised an ingenious method of "digging the horses in." Trenches are cut into the earth and the horses driven into what is not unlike a stall. This stall, besides keeping the animals from wandering away, is a great protection for them from the biting winds.

Most of the troops used in the Dardanelles operations have been transferred to Mudros Island in the Mediterranean, to remain there until the contemplated spring offensive of the Allies at Salonika. View of camp at Mudros.