Answer Advertisements

The Whig endeavors to exclude from its columns all objectionable or misleading advertising. A great many small classified advertisements come from distant places, and as we are unable to know all the facts concerning them, it transpires that occasionally an advertisement appears which should not. Whenever we find that the facts are not as stated in the advertisement, we discontinue the advt at once. A Queen street lady has called the Whig's attention to an advertisement in our issue of Saturday; April 1st, in which the advertiser promised to furnish names and everything necessary." When the application was received the Kingston woman was asked to remit $15 to cover cost of supplies, which, of course, she did not do. The Whig immediately discontinued their advections of the course of vertisement, as it had no wish to be a party to the misleading of any of our readers.
