It Was Paid.

As the gas bill of a "portable" theatre showing in a provincial town in England for a month had not been paid at the week's end, when it became due, a man appeared on the Monday night following to cut off the supply if the bill was not paid on the spot.

The doorkeeper remonstrated with him, pointing out that the manager was on the boards at the time and could not possibly leave the stage for an hour—the gas man might call.

"No," said the gas man, obstinately. "I'm going to cut it off now."

"Hold hard," said the doorkeeper. "I will go and tell the manager."

Disguising himself in a huge red cloak and a great felt hat with a drooping feather, and a sword at his side, he walked on the stage with the words, "Behold, my lord, the man stands at the castle gate waiting to be remunerated for the glimmers, and if not seen instantly darkness threatens us."

The manager (taking in the situation)—Go; I follow thee.—London Fun.

Artificial Limb Marvels.

Since the war broke out, artificial limb-makers have surprised many people by the excellence of their achievements. One dashing young officer, who lost his right leg just above the knee in the Marne fighting, has been fitted with so good a substitute that he is still able to continue in the service. He is now a pilot in the Royal Flying Corps, and is busily employed at the front.

Another adventurer, who lost the major portion of one of his legs in a Mexican rebellion, came to England soon after the beginning of hostilities, hoping to take part in the fighting. He is a most expert horseman, and has been fitted with an artificial limb so perfect that now he rides as well as ever. It is only the wildest of buckjumpers that can unsettle him.

Twice a Prisoner.

Mr. Aubrey Herbert, M.P. for South Somerset, who is home on leave, has had his fair share of experiences in the fighting line. He has been taken prisoner both by the Germans and the Turks. In the former case, he and his men were captured together with the trench they occupied, but before they could be removed the trench was retaken, and they were set free. It was at Gallipoli that Mr. Herbert was in the power of the Turks, being a hostage to them during a truce for the burial of the dead. He declares the Turkish soldier to be vastly superior to the German as a clean fighter, and speaks most appreciatively of the courtesy shown to him by Turkish officers and men.

A Lifelong Bargain.

There is a barber's shop in Cape Town at which Sir Leander Starr Jameson can always have a hair-cut and shave for nothing. Years ago "Dr. Jim" then in practice, attended the barber's wife during a dangerous illness. Through his skill she recovered. The husband was deeply grateful; but he was not in a position to pay. Instead, he offered to give "Dr. Jim" a free hair-cut and shave for the rest of his life. Whenever Sir Leander is in Cape Town he goes to the shop, and the barber carries out his bargain.
