Face Peeling Habit Becoming Fashionable

Women of fashion and refinement in this country as in Europe seem to have been acquiring the mercantile wax habit, depending less and less upon cosmetics for their complexion difficulties. It does seem a bit queer to just peel off the worn-out skin when it loses its youthful color and appearance, now that this can be done so easily, safely, painlessly and economically. There's no trouble getting mercantile wax at any drug store (an ounce will do), since its virtues have become generally known here, and there's no trouble using it—just as you use cold cream, applying at night, washing off the old skin in tiny flakes, a little each day. The new under-skin which gradually appears is velvety, soft and beautifully white, radiant with girlish loveliness. Any surface trouble like pimples, red or yellow patches, freckles, etc., vanishes of course with the discarded cuticle. It has also become the fashion, when wrinkles begin to appear, to bathe the face once a day for a while in a harmless solution made by dissolving an ounce of powdered azoite in a half pint of witch hazel. This is remarkably effective in erasing the hateful lines.

Owing to the absence of the bride-elect's father and brothers, who are overseas, the wedding will take place very quietly the latter part of April in St. Paul's church, Kingston, Ont.

Says Mary Jane.

"I don't know what to do with this old wooden kitchen chair," remarked the bride.

"Cut a piece of clean carpeting exactly to fit the seat," replied Mary Jane. "Turn the yoke and paneled front all the way around, and after placing some padding beneath the carpeting, tack down the folded edge with brass-headed tacks an inch apart. Then paint the chair red, green or any other color, and gold the knobs in the splines with gold paint. Gold, you know, will harmonize with any shade."

The Beauty of Harmony

Few women seem to realize the advantage, assistance and general help that are obtained from having the tone or note, as it were, that of harmony through and part of the various phases of life. Even educated women and women of more or less nice instincts seem to fail to realize how much can be done by the individual to make a certain amount of harmony in life.

If a woman is in the least high strung, temperamental or nervous, it is advisable, if not necessary, that her surroundings should be as much as possible harmonious and in good taste.

Unfortunately to carry out the idea satisfactorily more or less money is necessary. But a woman who can plan well and also has good taste can choose her pictures, wall paper, rugs and furniture to look well in a conservative way both singly and as a whole. No matter how few her possessions may be, a woman can have around her a something that suggests calm and peace wherever the eye rests.

Every one is better mentally, physically and temperamentally if the home life is free from disputes, bad temper or irritation from any member of the family. Harmony counts for more in home life than anywhere, and there it is most important and far-reaching in its beneficial results. The one and only way to obtain harmony in home life is to have each and every member in the home circle considerate of the others in every way—in other words, self control, which so many do not think worth while just in the family circle.

Observing a certain amount of care in selecting the colors for one's garments is not only more satisfactory in the long run to the wearer, but has a pleasing and more or less soothing effect upon others. Few women seem to realize how necessary it is to dress in colors that harmonize with the complexion and eyes. Another important point is that as women grow older it is wise to change the style of clothing as well as the color, so as to be as much as possible still have that harmonious general effect.

Many of the unpleasant and even dangerous occurrences in life would be done away with if people were more careful in conversation to observe a rule to have every topic one that is conducive to a feeling of general harmony for all.

A certain amount of harmony can be expressed by the attitude of the body, which with some people is merely the outward expression of the working of a soul and mind in harmony and accord with all their fellow beings. Harmony in the speaking voice is a desirable quality. Even, well regulated tones are rare. That so few people

Sleepytime Tales

ROGER'S NEW TROUSERS.

Once upon a time Roger went down town with his mother. He didn't go very often and it was as new and strange to him. His mother gave him the money to pay their fare and he felt very big when he handed it to the conductor. Roger's mother told him she was going to buy him a new suit just like "Daddy's" and he was very much delighted to have a real man's suit just like his father's.

Roger had never worn a real man's suit with trousers and real pockets and when the clerk tried one on him he didn't want to take it off and asked if he couldn't wear it home. His mother told him he might and they started off, Roger trying to walk as much like a big man as he could.

When they reached home his mother told him he might go out to play until it was time for his father to come home, and then he could go to the corner and meet him.

Roger felt so really grown up that he didn't care to play with his shovel in the sand pile, but found a stick which he used as a cane and he practised walking like father and swinging his cane just like a real gentleman.

When it was time to go and meet his father his mother told him to be sure and go no further than the corner and to wait there until his father came. Roger walked down the street and watched for a long, long time to see his father get off the car. Many cars passed and no father came until at last Roger began to get hungry and felt more like a hungry little boy than a great big man.

All at once he heard someone say: "Well, I declare, if I didn't go right past my little boy and I didn't know him," and Roger looked up and there was his father right behind him. You see his Daddy didn't know that he had a little man in trousers, and had gone by Roger while Roger was looking for him.

Pampered Sons And Foolish Mothers

"I often used to think before the war came what would be the result of the ease and laxity with which children were being allowed to come up," said Mrs. Willoughby Cummings of Toronto the other day, adding, after a pause: "The result, we see now, is the young man won't care for his mother and the woman who doesn't care who wins the war—she thinks she would be as comfortable under German as under British rule. The main point is that she won't stir herself to see farther than her own selfish and sluggish present."

"There's another result of the pampered boy, too," said a mother of sons at the front. "His mother has given him every silly sort of food he has craved for and then when he gets to Exhibition Camp or to Salisbury or Bramshott, and finds that he can't have lemon pie for breakfast and a choice of three kinds of cake for tea, he writes home and whines that he's starved."

"The weak point in his complaint," interposed a third woman, whose knitting needles clicked vigorously, "is that he generally sends a photograph which shows him several pounds heavier and a long sight healthier and better looking than ever he was before he went into khaki."

Everybody laughed, a few adding corroborative testimony as to the type of youth who wails of "starvation." But when the laughter died down a serious voice broke in:
"Do you realize," it said, "that one silly mother who talks like the mothers we've been speaking of, can undo the efforts of many recruiting officers? If it were possible these stories should be traced to their source in mother and son, and the latter dealt with in some way that would put a little stiffening into his backbone, and give him a taste for a real man's food."
A Clear Case.
If it be true, as Henry Holt avers, that the magazines of to-day are sending literature to the dogs, considering the quality of some of that literature, is not this a clear case calling for the intervention of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals?
