NAPANEE MAN RETURNS

FROM FRONT WITH A SHRAPNEL WOUND

Pte. Charles Burgess Killed—A Young Man Honorably Acquitted—140th Assault-at-Arms.

(From Our Own Correspondent.) Napanee, April 29.—Pte. George MacFarlane, who went overseas last summer as a shoeling smith, has returned home with a shrapnel wound in the back, which he received whilst shooting a horse near the firing line in France.

Another Napanee boy has given his life for his King and Country. Pte. Charles Burgess of the 21st Battalion, who was killed about April 9th.

Ernest Walker, Thomas Street, has received word that one of his four sons, at present overseas has been wounded—Pte. J. Earl Walker, 39th Battalion.

In the County Judge's Criminal Court before Judge Madden, Bert Lambert was found guilty of theft, and on his promise to join an Overseas Battalion, which he later did, he was allowed to go on suspended sentence.

In the same court Roy Peters, charged with a serious offence against a young girl, was found not guilty and honorably acquitted.

The assault-at-arms held by the 144th Battalion in the Armouries last night was well attended and the numerous events were well received. During the wrestling bout between Ellerbeck and MacKimmie, just at the close of the bout, MacKimmie unfortunately hurt his arm.

No bones were broken but it is severely strained.

WHAT GARDINER SAID

About David Lloyd George Then and Now.

New York Sun. The attack upon David Lloyd George by Alfred G. Gardiner, editor of the London Daily News, is apparently the beginning of a deliberate campaign to drive the Minister of Munitions from the Cabinet.

"The Minister," says Mr. Gardiner, "the most brilliant and aggressive journalist in England, has made its choice between Asquith and you. It heard much about Asquith from your friends of the press. You escaped insult. You will escape exposure no longer."

The Minister's "friends of the press" Mr. Gardiner has in mind are Lord Northcliffe and his allies, who have shaken the Cabinet more than once and have had a good deal to do with routing England from her lethargy and reforming the administration of the War Office.

Mr. Asquith's supporters may criticize the methods of Lord Northcliffe, but it cannot be denied that his agitation has resulted in a more vigorous prosecution of the war.

Mr. Lloyd George has been in the van of it. He has done wonders with the munitions factories. Of late, however, he has had little to say in public, remaining in the background, which was something new for him.

The recruiting compromise that saved the coalition Cabinet a few days ago did not entirely please him. Another storm the Cabinet might not be able to weather. Suddenly comes this fierce assault upon David Lloyd George's motives.

He is charged with insincerity, mockingly called a Man of Destiny, and threatened with unmasking. Finally, he is asked pointedly: "Am I wrong in assuming you have been in close intimacy with the chief assassins of the government?"

Now Alfred G. Gardiner cultivates public men, enjoys their confidence, and reads their minds, as the great Deiane used to do. Some one has been collecting ammunition to fire broadsides at the Minister of Munitions and shell him out of the coalition Cabinet.

There will be more from Gardiner. It is only fair to say that he has long suspected the versatile Welshman of being more ambitious than sincere. In a clever sketch of Lord George written several years ago Gardiner, after giving him credit for having "the swiftest mind in politics," extraordinary energy and courage that never faltered, concluded by saying: "Mr. Lloyd George will succeed in proportion to his fidelity to the inspiration, not of Westminster with its intrigues, but of Wales with its simple faith."

Grand Trunk Change Of Time. Effective April 30th. The local train now leaving the city station at 6.58 p. m., connecting at Kingston Junction with local trains for Brockville and Belleville, will leave at 6.48 p. m.

This change is necessary as trains will leave the junction ten minutes earlier.

CRIME OF LUXURY.

$500,000,000 a Year Is Spent On Dress.

London Chronicle. On alcoholic drink we have been in the habit of spending over £150,000,000 a year. This does nothing to maintain our efficiency. In the vast majority of cases it injures health and character.

But if it is the men who spend most on drink, their wives, daughters, sisters, sweethearts, have their own, foible: clothes! It seems as if we spend between four and five hundred million pounds a year on dress. Look at the costly circulares which the big drapers pour into all well-to-do households by every post, tempting us to buy the newest patterns in 50 guinea furs, night gowns in "crepe de chene, French knots and finished ribbons"; combinations, "trimmed with valenciennes lace and lagration, fine embroidery motifs with ribbon beading at waist, hand boots"; monstrous high-heeled called hats; coats and skirts ranging from the extreme of constrictions to an embarrassing fullness, just to warrant our purchasing a new outfit every few months.

We women must sternly say to ourselves in this national emergency that, whether rich or poor, we will not give another penny on dress beyond what is imperatively required for warmth or cleanliness.

After dress, comes servants. We are monopolizing the time of over a million men and women in the army of domestic servants. These must cost us, in food and wages, between sixty and seventy million pounds a year. In so far as they are tending young children or the infirm, they are necessary. This does not justify the households in which there are actually more servants than people to be waited on—even three or four times as many beyond stairs as in the drawing room.

Let us shut up our superfluous rooms, put away the multitude of things that need dusting and polishing, simplify our meals, wait on ourselves; and thus set free several hundred thousand additional workers.

Then there is the wild rush of all classes after vacant-minded amusement. Millions of pounds are still being spent on perpetually recurring visits to cinema shows, the music-halls and theatres. Sunday excursions, holidays at the seaside, trips by motor car, week-end golf, and costly meals at restaurants are absorbing an alarming proportion of our income.

There is something very disgusting in these levels at a time when for us, men are being slaughtered by thousands, and women work night and day in the exhausting toil of the shell factory. The customers of these hotels, restaurants and public amusements are taking up the time and energy of something like a million men and women—the men and women who are so badly wanted elsewhere.

Let us resolve in this emergency to occupy our strength in work, and our leisure, if not in rest, in those simple recreations which cost neither money nor service.

PETTY CRITICISM.

Mr. Asquith's Salary a Trouble to Some People—Why Should It? Everyman.

The result of the parliamentary debate on the salaries of M. P.'s is distinctly disappointing. The Government proposed to pay only one salary where two were being drawn. This was characterized as mean by Sir Edward Carson. The House agreed with him, and £40,000 which the Government proposed to save is still to be paid to members. After this, surely there will be no further demand that Ministers should be content with reduced salaries. If you agree to pay two salaries where one only is earned, it would scarcely be logical to object to pay one salary when that is more than earned. Ministers have never had to work as hard as they do to-day. You read of Mr. Asquith arriving at Charing Cross from the Italian front at 4 a. m., holding a Cabinet Council eight hours later, and then attending the House. That is not bad for a man of sixty-four; and so far from having his salary reduced he is entitled to payment for overtime. Five thousand pounds a year to the holder of the mightiest post in the world is scarcely excessive. Many a trader makes more in ordinary times, and now they are becoming millionaires. According to the press of last week, there are three Mr. Singers each drawing £150,000 a year from sewing-machines, and by some Mr. Asquith is grudging his thirtieth part of this for presiding over the greatest empire of all times at the most critical hour of her destiny.
