A REDINGOTE EFFECT WITH LOW SASH.

The pointed basque, separated from a full tunic by a softly draped sash, gives to this spring costume a redingote suggestion. Basque and tunic are of putty colored faille, sleeves and skirt of putty colored taffeta, and motifs of the faille embroidered in tan and cream are set at the girdle. The cape-collar has trills of tan chiffon.

New Bright-Colored Dollies.

Now that there is such a range for bright colors, colored centrepieces and dollies are even replacing the all-white ones which have for so long been fashionable for the luncheon table. Cretonne which is intended for this purpose may be bought in the shops. On the striped material figures to represent the places to be occupied by centrepieces, glasses and plates, are marked. The whole cloth may be laid upon the table as it is bought, or the pieces may be cut separately. This a very bright, unusual effect is given the table:

Sleepytime Tales

SNOWBALL GETS INTO TROUBLE

Once upon a time Snowball, the little white kitten, ran out of doors to visit with a kitten she saw playing in the yard. This kitten was all black and they looked very funny together with one all white and the other the color of jet. They played together for quite a time when the black kitten suddenly ran out of the yard and down the street as fast as she could. Now Snowball was never allowed to go out of the yard alone but she forgot all about that and chased after the black kitten as fast as her little legs would carry her. Through mud puddles, dirty grass and dusty roads they raced until poor Snowball was as black as her playmate. When Snowball started for home a long time afterwards she was so black and Spotty, the little dog that lived with her, didn't know her at all and barked at her when she tried to get into her own yard. As soon as Snowball would put her nose inside the gate Spotty would make a dash for her and drive her back and although Snowball tried to make him understand who she was, he didn't believe her and chased her out and-way down the street. At last Snowball began to meow very pitifully and Spotty pricked up his ears and listened. Could that dirty alley cat be his little white friend Snowball? It did sound like her, but no, it couldn't be, and Spotty chased her again. This was too much for Snowball and she began to cry and whine until Spotty came up close and then he saw it was surely Snowball. So he let her come into the yard and to Cook in the kitchen. Cook started to drive her out before she saw who it was, then she took her and scrubbed all the dirt off until she was as white as ever. Snowball hated to have a bath and thought it was part of the punishment for running out of the yard, so she never did it again.

BRIGHT COLORS IN TAFFETA.

New Gowns of Present Season Indicative Cheer.

It is evident that Dame Fashion is in a happy mood this season, because never has her handwork been so indicative of cheer and care-freeness in bright colors, alluring fabrics and combinations of these two.

In nothing is this more apparent than the new silks which are being shown. "It is a silk season," declared one dealer, and a taffeta silk season, of that. Taffetas are sold for all kinds of gowns, morning, afternoon, evening and in some cases even for sport things, though these favor more the new English wide-wale corduroys.

This corduroy is in itself a thing of beauty, unlike anything that has ever been shown. It lacks the heaviness and weight of the old-time fabric bearing the same name it comes principally in the bright colors and is used for sport skirts and coats to be worn with soft, washable blouses.

But the silks! They are striped, plaid, check, and in plain colors. In many cases they are almost the replica of those worn several generations ago in pattern and combination of colors. Though some of these claim to be new, and there are few samples of these older productions left to prove the truth of the assertion, memory tells the observer that there is nothing new under the sun—in colors.

Two strong colors in the silks are rose and gold. There are several blues which are holding the attention of the public; one of the most popular is the porcelain blue. There is no end to the combinations of colors. The new beige, a color whose tone is between gold and brown, appears in many of the plaid patterns.

The new in fabric includes the satin taffeta, a cloth similar to the "soiree", also new this season and used mostly for the three-piece suits. These three-piece combinations promise to be very popular. The coats and skirts are of the silk and the blouse a combination of the main fabric and Georgette crepe.

This crepe is becoming more scarce and of a better quality than ever before, two conditions which rarely exist at the same time. The reason for the shortage is said to be the scarcity of dyestuffs. Dealers say there has been an advance of 25 per cent, in the cost of the material, and they are looking for another increase soon.

Another new silk which has found favor for suits is the faille Francaise. Pongees are being strongly talked for one-piece dresses and the goods are already being displayed. The greater part of these come with the natural colored grounds brightened by stripes of vivid colors.

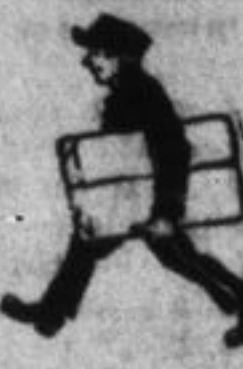

A little tendency toward satin for gowns and frocks is apparent, but dealers are looking to the fall season for the demand for satin, and are making their plans accordingly. One of the reasons given for the great popularity of silks is its increased durability. There is little of the old-time trouble caused by the fabric breaking. This is accounted for in the decrease of loading used in finishing the silk.

A word about the trimmings used on these wonderful creations of silk. There are laces made heavy with embroidery of gold and silver threads, yet utterly lacking in the stiffness of similar embroideries of an earlier period. Soft chiffon laces have edges done in delicately tinted flowers, and there are wonderful insertions whose patterns are done in what looks like pearls of many tints as well as those containing the touch of the Orient so dear to the hearts of women.

 SKIRT 6622

Exceedingly youthful in line and effect is this tailored frock carried out in checked mohair trimmed with faille silk in plain color. The jacket may be made with or without a yoke and straps and the choice is also given between a notched or shawl collar. In medium size, the suit requires 4 1/2 yards 64-inch mohair and 3/4 yards 40-inch faille for the trimming.

As a single breasted model the jacket is sure to be fashionable throughout the spring and summer, therefore will be attractive in other materials than mohair. Lined may be used effectively for its development.

To cut the model requires unusual care before each of the number of parts to the pattern and the necessity of pinning each one correctly to preserve the lines of the jacket. After the material is folded smoothly on the cutting table the under-facing and front straps are first placed into position on a lengthwise thread. The back and yoke follow on a lengthwise fold.

On the upper row first place the front, then the back strap and sleeve sections (upper and lower) on a lengthwise thread. Between the lower sleeve section and the yoke are laid the pocket and sleeve strap while to the right of these are the front of the yoke and the collar.

Young women who elect to wear frocks that are modeled along lines that are strictly conservative will favor this suit and find much enjoyment in wearing it because of its comfort-affording qualities.

The skirt is a circular model that may be cut in one or two pieces.

SOME housekeepers use ordinary laundry soap for washing dishes. At the same time they spend considerable money on lotions, creams, etc., in an effort, usually unsuccessful, to preserve their hands from the roughening effects of the soap.

Other housekeepers use nothing but Ivory Soap. Knowing that it cannot harm the tenderest skin, they deem its use a true economy. And then they have the satisfaction of knowing that their glassware, silver and china are scrupulously clean.
