Von Wiegand, of the New York World, writing from Berlin, says: "That some German mothers have not gone on strike against providing the Fatherland with future defenders is evident from the vital statistics just issued. "In February five mothers in Berlin, ranging in age between 40 and 45, gave birth to their sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth child, respectively, two girls and three boys, all living. "Three other women in Berlin gave birth to their fourteenth, eleven to their thirteenth, eight to their twelfth, five to their eleventh, and seven to their tenth child."
