Many Military Matters

The nine battalions at Barrieffield Camp will strive to do the very best work and make the most possible progress that the opportunity affords.

The spirit of the competition between the units all organized at the same time will play a great part in attaining this end. No one realizes this more than the battalion officers now. They know that they will be up against other units that have had exactly the same difficulties to overcome that they have. All were authorized within a few days of each other. The districts allotted to each were according to the best expert advice exactly similar in advantages and disadvantages, there was no partiality shown, and it will simply be a case of the best battalion winning.

With the eagle eye of the ever-watchful officers of the headquarters staff always noting the work being done and the progress being made, every officer, N. C. O. and man at Barrieffield Camp will have to give all possible energy to the making of his battalion a unit worthy of the Canadian Expeditionary Force.

When one considers the very important part that training takes in the making of a soldier or the organizing of fighting units for service at the front, the necessity of a good system can be seen particularly when the men are separated into detachments of usually fifty men each. The great tendency with small bodies of men widely separated is to have the training run on what the lieutenant or other officer as the case might be considers in his limited personal opinion to be the best.

At Barrieffield all this will be changed. There will be nine battalions of 1,100 men each working towards the one goal, that of efficiency. Colonel T. D. R. Hemming, D.O.C., will be in direct and intimate touch with the actual working conditions, and be within a few minutes' walk of where the men are actually doing the work. With this will be the additional advantage to the officers of the battalions in having the headquarters so near that it can be used as an information bureau.

There is a handful of men in the army who seldom shoulder a gun, and it's little that's known about them.

When everything's said and done; And they try to creep up on notice As they quietly slip off to war, For they never expect a send-off In the Army Service Corps.

They don't aim at capturing prisoners, Or taking the enemy's flag, But they serve in an humbler vocation For the sake of the grand old rag, Amid the inferno of battle, And in spite of the cannon's roar, They keep on quietly working In the Army Service Corps.

When the foe's heavy gun-fire Has scattered and smashed their supplies, They take good grips on their upper lips, And with a never-say-die in their eyes They hustle around and check things up, And put them in order once more, For they don't know the meaning of quitting In the Army Service Corps.

And when the war is over, And peace again doth reign, This handful of men silently turn Back to their homes again, And they try to escape any notice As they quietly slip ashore, For it's the way they have of doing things In the Army Service Corps.

And peace again doth reign, This handful of men silently turn Back to their homes again, And they try to escape any notice As they quietly slip ashore, For it's the way they have of doing things In the Army Service Corps.

The standing orders for Barrieffield Camp will include the following: "There will be a duty band detailed for each area to play every morning immediately after reveille has sounded. Buglers are not to practice within half a mile of the camp.

One night recently, while a detachment of the new army were camping at Aldershot, it was very cold. One man who shivered could not find any of his outer clothes. So he went from one place to another asking if anyone knew where they were. "H-h-has a-a-anyone s-seen my b-blanket?" He was told that no one had. "H-h-has a-a-anyone s-seen m-m-y t-t-tunic or t-t-trousers?" "No!" The man scratched his head for a moment. "W-w-well, I'm g-g-glad t-t-that I h-have g-g-got a w-w-warm p-p-pair of b-braces on."

A., and means that cancellation of all Connaught Cup games as well as the International match between Canada and the United States.

It is understood that either Shocker, the former Ottawa pitcher, or Piercy, who was with the Vernon club of the Pacific Coast League last year, will be obtained from the New York Americans by the Toronto Leafs. Shocker worked against the Leafs at the Island last year, and during his five innings on the mound shaped up like a promising twirler. Piercy had a good season at the coast last year, but has been worked in no league games by the Yankees this season. Shocker, on the other hand, has taken part in several.

lowed only twenty-seven men to face him. He also fanned eighteen. Not a man reached first base and only two succeeded in hitting the ball out of the infield. They fell in fielders' hands. Although almost two hundred of its members are in khaki the Winnipeg Cricket Association at its annual meeting decided to continue operations this season.

Judging from the strength that has been disclosed in the games played to date a team that can win ninety games this season will come very close to carrying away the American League pennant.

If the Boston Red Sox repeat as pennant winners Carrigan's pitchers must do wonderful work. Outside of the box the team does not shape up as unusually strong. It is weak on the bases and none too strong with the stick.

"Nick" Bawlf, who played hockey with the Shamrock N. H. A. team two seasons ago at the Arena, will play lacrosse for the Cornwall N. L. U. team this season. Bawlf is now a lieutenant in a battalion stationed at Cornwall.

Capt. "Tom" Flanagan writes in the Toronto Telegram as follows: In the last week athletic and other sporting meets have been held by military units in Toronto. There were no world's records broken, but there was better than that—sportsmanship and keen rivalry and competition among the several sections.

The meet of the Kingston batteries at the Island was a model of all that was good, and despite the showers was splendidly run off. The boys made a great day of it, not only in the keenness of the competition, but especially in the good fellowship and spirit shown throughout.

That is the keynote of what we are aiming at in the Military Athletic Association; it has been the success Association. Good healthy rivalry, of the Sportsmen's Association. Good healthy rivalry, always tempered with sportsmanlike action, is the bulwark and this Kingston Battery hit it.
