Without exception the delegates from these places said they were only too glad to entertain the auxiliary and would gladly find billets for all.

When the proposal was defeated, Mrs. Willoughby Cummings, editor of the Leaflet, the organ of the auxiliary, expressed her pleasure at the unanimous decision of the meeting not to eliminate the delegates and the more that attended the annual gatherings the greater would be the inspiration that would be carried back to the different branches. If it was impossible to billet all the delegates, a large tent could be utilized, and the women who were accommodated there in "would have the time of their lives."

Officers Re-elected. It was announced to the meeting that as a result of the balloting Mrs. W. B. Carey had been re-elected second vice-president and Miss Louise Kirkpatrick had been re-elected Leaflet secretary. All the other officers were re-elected by acclamation, and the president, Miss Macaulay, thanked the auxiliary for its continued confidence in its officers.
