NURSES BUY CIGARETTES HELD A FLOWER SERVICE

DR. R. S. STEVENS, LATE OF LANSDOWNE, WRITES

Tommies are Wonderful—Always Patient and Respectful, Says Doctor—Have Few "Extras" With Shilling a Day.

To how great an extent the nurses on duty look after their wounded charges overseas may be gathered from a letter from Dr. R. S. Stevens, of No. 22 General Hospital, France, received by his father, Alex. Stevens, Delta, and published in the Brockville Recorder. Dr. Stevens mentions the fact that in many cases the nursing sisters use up practically all they earn in buying cigarette and other comforts for the wounded "Tommies." Dr. Stevens' letter reads:

"We will be here a week tomorrow and are now getting straightened around a bit. The work is very interesting, but as we sometimes get sudden orders to evacuate everything possible to England, we cannot keep our cases very long. This is done very frequently to see that we can do it, so that should it ever be necessary, we are in a position to clear our wards promptly.

"The weather has been cold ever since we arrived. Today is the first day we have had since we came and it is more like an early day in May at home than like the middle of June. Under canvas in France is not a holiday affair.

"Everything is very English here as the commandant of the hospital is an Englishman. We have 'tea' at four in the afternoon and dinner at 7.30. The latter affair is a most formal function. We parade in after the colonel and are not allowed to rise until he does, which is at least an hour and a quarter later. We turn out at 6.15 a.m., have parade at 7 a.m., breakfast at 8 and are in the wards at nine. It was my turn to be orderly officer yesterday and this morning I had to turn out at 3 a.m. and accompany a convoy of hospital ship cases to —, where they were put on a hospital train. The hospital trains are very wonderful in their arrangement and equipment.

"I have a young Scotchman for a batman. He is a bright lad, but it is very difficult to understand his Scotch as he is a Highlander. He wears a belt covered with badges and buttons—from its appearance he has one from every unit in the service. It is an article of apparel which would be highly prized by a North American Indian.

"The Tommies themselves are the best part of all. They are patient, respectable fellows. They accept pain, orders to go forward, etc., with a smile. They always refer to England as 'Blighty' and when told that he is to be invalided to 'Blighty,' the Tommy wears a grin that won't come off. They all speak of a German attack as a 'show' or perhaps 'Fritz put a show on,' as though it were a matter of play. The poor fellows have no many extra comforts on their shilling, but they are well fed and clothed. The nurses are all quite taken with them and I believe many of them spend nearly all they earn in buying cigarettes, etc. for them. If anybody at home wants to donate a bit to the Tommies, I would be glad to see that it is properly spent. Many of us here are doing what we can to provide some of them with little extras.

"Now I know that there are many things that you would like to ask me and there are many things that I would like to tell you, but I cannot do so. The most interesting things, in fact, cannot be told. However, I will give you a few yarns when I get home.

"There is little in the way of news that I can give you. We are confined to our military district and anyway if it were possible to travel about sightseeing, we have no time to go."

A National Stocktaking

Canadian Courier.
 Conscription is not likely to be resorted to in this country before this war ends but National registry ought to be, must be adopted sooner or later. The registration of Canada's manhood—and womanhood too, for that matter—is something that might well have been done before there was any thought of war with Germany. Certainly it ought to be done before much more time has passed down the lakes. Registration is merely a form of stocktaking. If the facts were accurately reported and skillfully analyzed they would be of the greatest usefulness in enabling a wise government to frame a suitable economic policy for the nation. The Prussian system of card-indexing all citizens was no doubt a step too far in advance. As used in the Kaiser's kingdom it was an encroachment on the liberties of a citizen. But a modified form of the same thing might well be used in Canada. It would show us what people we had, what they could do and what they couldn't do. It would enable manufacturers to judge accurately the labour conditions in any given district. It would indicate what class of people were coming to the country and what classes were being drawn away from us to the United States. From this knowledge it would often be possible to gain other knowledge as to the reasons for emigration from Canada and so on.

Girl Was Given Chance

A nineteen-year-old girl from Perth Road appeared before Lieut. Col. Hunter on the charge of vagrancy. She was allowed out on suspended sentence, and went to Harrow-smith, the kind-hearted dispenser of justice having found a place for her there. Should she misbehave in the future, she will be sent to the reformatory.

REV. T. W. SAVARY SPOKE ON "LESSONS FROM THE DAISY"

Children Brought Flowers to Service and Afterwards Distributed Them at The Local Hospitals—Work for Everyone in the Present War.

The annual flower service at St. James' church is always an interesting event for the children. Sunday morning this service was held, and there was a very large turnout of the children, who brought a very liberal supply of beautiful flowers, which were given to the patients of the local hospitals after the service by the children, who paid a visit to these institutions.

Rev. T. W. Savary delivered on appropriate address to the children, taking as his subject, "Lesson from the Daisy." He referred to the many beautiful flowers growing in Canada, and said that the people were so accustomed to seeing them that he did not think they appreciated their worth in the way they should. Owing to the fact that we could not all do our share in making how small. The great leaders needed the help of all the others. One could not do without the help of the other.

One great lesson taught by the daisy was that of co-operation. In the great war now going on we could not all be leaders, but we could all be helpers. We could not all be great men in the battles, but we could all do our share, no matter how small. The great leaders needed the help of all the others. One could not do without the help of the other.

They grew in Palestine, and formed the link that joined our childhood to that of the childhood of Christ. The daisy recalled to us Christ, as he loved the daisy just as we do, and in His childhood had gathered daisies in the field. It was something that bound our life to His.

One great lesson taught by the daisy was that of co-operation. In the great war now going on we could not all be leaders, but we could all be helpers. We could not all be great men in the battles, but we could all do our share, no matter how small. The great leaders needed the help of all the others. One could not do without the help of the other.

HIS CONSCIENCE CLEAR.

Joseph West, the 74th Battery lad, who while on sentry duty last Thursday night shot and killed Gunner Russell Elliott of the same battery, has declared to friends that his conscience is clear of any wrong doing. He said that he had simply done his duty as he saw it.

No White Feathering Here.

It becomes increasingly evident that Montreal women have no sympathies with the white feathering methods of recruiting which were adopted in England in the early stages of the war, says the Montreal Weekly Tattler. Mrs. Henry Joseph is an ardent recruiter, as might be expected of a woman whose two brothers are at the front, but she says: "Mothers and sisters do not scatter white feathers—that is a cruel thing to do—but help the men to go, for they are all needed and death with honor in Belgium far preferable to life here with dishonor."

He Got Away.

A bedraggled, oil-smeared, ruddy little man with something akin to fear in his big, brown eyes, stepped softly into the office of Arthur Concors, superintendent of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, 229 East Broadway, recently, says the New York Tribune.

Canada's First Farmer.

The first farmer settler in Canada who lived on the produce of the soil was Louis Hebert, an apothecary from Paris, who landed in Quebec in 1617 with his wife and children, and at once started to clear and cultivate the soil on what is now the site of the Cathedral of Quebec, of the Seminary and of this part of the Upper Town extending from Ste. Famille street to the Hotel Dieu. At that time that part of the city was called "Hebert's Farm." With a spade as his only tool, he worked and re-worked the soil until it was ready to receive seed. He threw in the seed from France, planted apple and rose trees, and, at last, saw undulating in the breeze, the golden ears, the flowers and fruits from his motherland. The third centenary of the landing of Louis Hebert will be commemorated in Quebec in 1917, and a Citizens' Committee has been formed to erect a monument to the first farmer of the colony.

Atlantic Harbors.

The St. Lawrence River ports have been developed in a satisfactory manner, particularly Montreal, which is one of the largest grain-shipping ports in the world. Both Montreal and Quebec, however, have some disadvantages. Although not much farther north than Halifax, the temperate influence of the ocean is so far away that for at least four months every year they are icebound whereas Halifax is clear. St. John is barred mainly on account of the 30-foot tide change there, which would make any extensive construction almost impossible.

The British have captured a group of defended buildings near Oviliers.
