NEWS IN THE MARINE WORLD

AN OGDENSBURG BOAT GOES DOWN AT SEA.

The Old Rutland, now Admiral Clark, lost in Caribbean Sea—Reconstructing the Columbia.
Word was received at Ogdensburg, N. Y., of the sinking of the former Ogdensburg steamer, Rutland, after having named the Admiral Clark, which went down August 16th in the Caribbean Sea with a loss of twenty out of her complement of twenty-six men.
The Admiral Clark was bound from Port Arthur, Tex., to the Argentine. She was a steel steamer about 250 feet long, and was sold a year ago by the Rutland Transit Company to the Pacific-Alaska Navigation Company. Prior to that the Rutland operated between Ogdensburg and Chicago.
The steamer Columbia, which is being rebuilt at Ogdensburg, has been removed from the Rutland dock to the marine railway, where she has been hauled out. The boat, which lay in shallow water there for several years, was purchased for $2,000 by an Ogdensburg syndicate, which is spending about $35,000 in rebuilding the craft. The Columbia will be ready to go into commission the latter part of this month.

Movements of Vessels.
The schooner Kitchen, which has been discharging coal at the penitentiary wharf, cleared for the Welland Canal.

The steamer Jex cleared for Sodus, M. T. Co's Bulletin: The steamer India cleared with the barge Quebec in tow; the India will load coal at Erie, and the Large Quebec will load grain at Port Colborne; the tug Barlett is due to arrive to-night with the barge Hamilton, with grain from Port Colborne which will be transhipped into barges for Montreal.

The smoke was reported to be very thick on the Lower St. Lawrence on Friday morning. Vessels were tied up at all the canals.
The steamer City of Ottawa passed up at 11.30 p. m. on Thursday.
The steamer Outland passed down at 2.15 a. m. Friday.
The steamer Haddington passed down Friday forenoon.
The steamers Calgariala and Bickerdike are expected to pass down during Friday night.

SUSPECTED PARALYSIS CASE

At Thousand Island Park — House Has Been Put Under Quarantine.
Thousand Island Park has a suspected case of infantile paralysis, and a quarantine has been put on the cottage of Mr. and Mrs. John Pidd, pending the arrival of Dr. Albert Bowen of the State Health Department. The suspect is Sherman, the 15-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Pidd. He has a high temperature and other characteristic of the disease, although no paralysis has set in. He has been ill since Sunday.
The Pidd cottage is in the woods, somewhat removed from others, and there is no danger of the disease spreading, it is said. There is another child in the Pidd home, but it has been put in another part of the house.

Last Sunday Trips.
S. S. America makes last Sunday trips to Cape for season on Sept. 10th, leaving at 7 a. m. and 2.15 p. m., passing through Island groups in afternoon.

Dr. J. W. Robertson, Ottawa, has crossed to France as Canadian delegate to the Agricultural Relief of the Allies' Fund. He will visit the ravaged areas.

In New York many persons are freely giving their blood to aid the infantile paralysis victims.

AUTHOR'S WIFE SUICIDES AFTER HUSBAND HAS BEEN KILLED.

E. A. Victor, English author and civil engineer, who was killed by a G.T. R. train near Toronto as he was taking a short cut to the train. The other picture shows his wife, who committed suicide in the Credit river near their summer home when she became distracted at the awful tragedy. Victor had just published a work on "Canada's Future," with introduction by Premier Borden and other notables.

THE DENTIST

The dentist smiles as he sees your face
With its look of woe which you can't erase.
He knows in your mouth there are teeth not sound
With nice live nerves he can fuss around.
His eyes light up and he laughs with glee
When you say it's not one that aches—but three.
"Will you step in?" he asks. In the chair you climb
With hot and cold chisel running up your spine.
"Open your mouth—a little wider, please,
And we'll see if we can't do something to ease
The pain a bit." He takes a steel rod
And round in the tender spot starts to prod.
At first you sink to the depths of the chair,
Then spring a foot or two up in the air.
Wiggle or twist—you can't get away,
He's got you down—and you have to stay.
"Just speak if it hurts." He knows that you heard,
With his fist in your mouth you can't say a word.
"Ah! that's the spot! Just a moment, keep still!"
Down from a hook he takes a big drill,
Turns on the juice—and then you can bet
The next ten minutes will bring out the sweat.
Next comes cold water; then he dries it out
With a cold air syringe just to hear you shout.
"Now don't close, please," and he leaves you alone
For an hour or two; you can't even groan.
When back he comes you're as meek as can be,
So he says: "Come to-morrow at half past three."
When you come again he tells you he's found
The one on the top will have to be crowned.
He uses a grindstone to smooth tooth down,
Takes an impression, then makes the crown.
Picks up a mallet and pounds away
Till your brain swirls and your hair turns gray.
You can't stand it longer—you're all fagged out;
At last he is finished—you let out a shout,
Dig down in your jeans, his bill to pay,
Say you'll not come again for many a day.
But when you try to eat, and find that you can,
You swear that your dentist is a fine little man.

GERMANS ESTABLISH KRUPP-GUN HOSPITAL

Repair Works Are Located Behind Front Line Trenches.

Quite near the western front in Flanders the Germans have established a miniature Krupp gun factory—a "cannon hospital," as it has been dubbed by the soldiers—where guns worn by constant action or injured by the enemy shells are treated, retested, and then sent back to the firing line. Two hundred and fifty workmen work in this hospital, an interesting account of which is given by a German journalist, who was afforded an opportunity of visiting it. He relates how, when looking at the havoc wrought by enemy shells on the guns, it is difficult to imagine how they can ever be repaired.
Very often damage occurs to the wooden parts, especially to the wheels. In the woodwork department are stocked all sizes of gun-wheels, so that in case of quick need a gun can be made serviceable in a very short time at the spot where the accident occurred.
After being repaired, cleaned and thoroughly examined the guns are taken to a specially built proving ground. Here the rifling of the barrels is rechecked, and, if necessary they are reground and recalibrated. Here also guns captured on the field are remade for use.
On machine guns, for which all extra parts are made and stored in readiness, the cooling jackets seem to be the most vulnerable to rifle bullets. With oxygen welding apparatus there repairs and even renewal of the jackets are effected without difficulty, each machine gun being thoroughly tested at the proving grounds before it leaves the hospital.

Special Regiments of Other Days.
What are known in the army as "fancy battalions," such as, for instance, the Navvies, Sportsmen, Public School, Bantams, Footballers and Bankers, are not quite the novelties that some people imagine them to be. So long ago as 1763 a Miners' battalion was enlisted for service under Marlborough, and did good work during the siege of Tournay, where immense subterranean works were constructed on both sides.
The 14th battalion of the Middlesex Regiment, popularly called "The Devil's Own," used to be composed entirely of members of the legal profession. "What!" exclaimed King George III. one day when reviewing them, "All lawyers, are they? Then call them 'The Devil's Own.'" And the Devil's Own they have been from that day to this.
"John Company's Quilldrivers" was the unofficial title of a battalion of clerks who, in the early days, banded themselves together for the defence of Calcutta. "John Company" was, of course, the then nickname of the old East India Company. "The Quilldrivers" consisted at first of one officer and thirty men, with a gun team;
