

TO CAPT. FRYATT'S MEMORY.
British Tommies were so incensed over the execution of Capt. Fryatt by the Germans that they marked the large shells and guns with inscriptions they thought suitable.

TO CAPT. FRYATT'S MEMORY.
Among the ways used by the British Tommies to keep in mind the execution of Capt. Fryatt was that of writing "Remember Capt. Fryatt" on the breeches of the large guns, so that each time the gun was fired the soldiers would remember it was another shot in revenge for the execution.

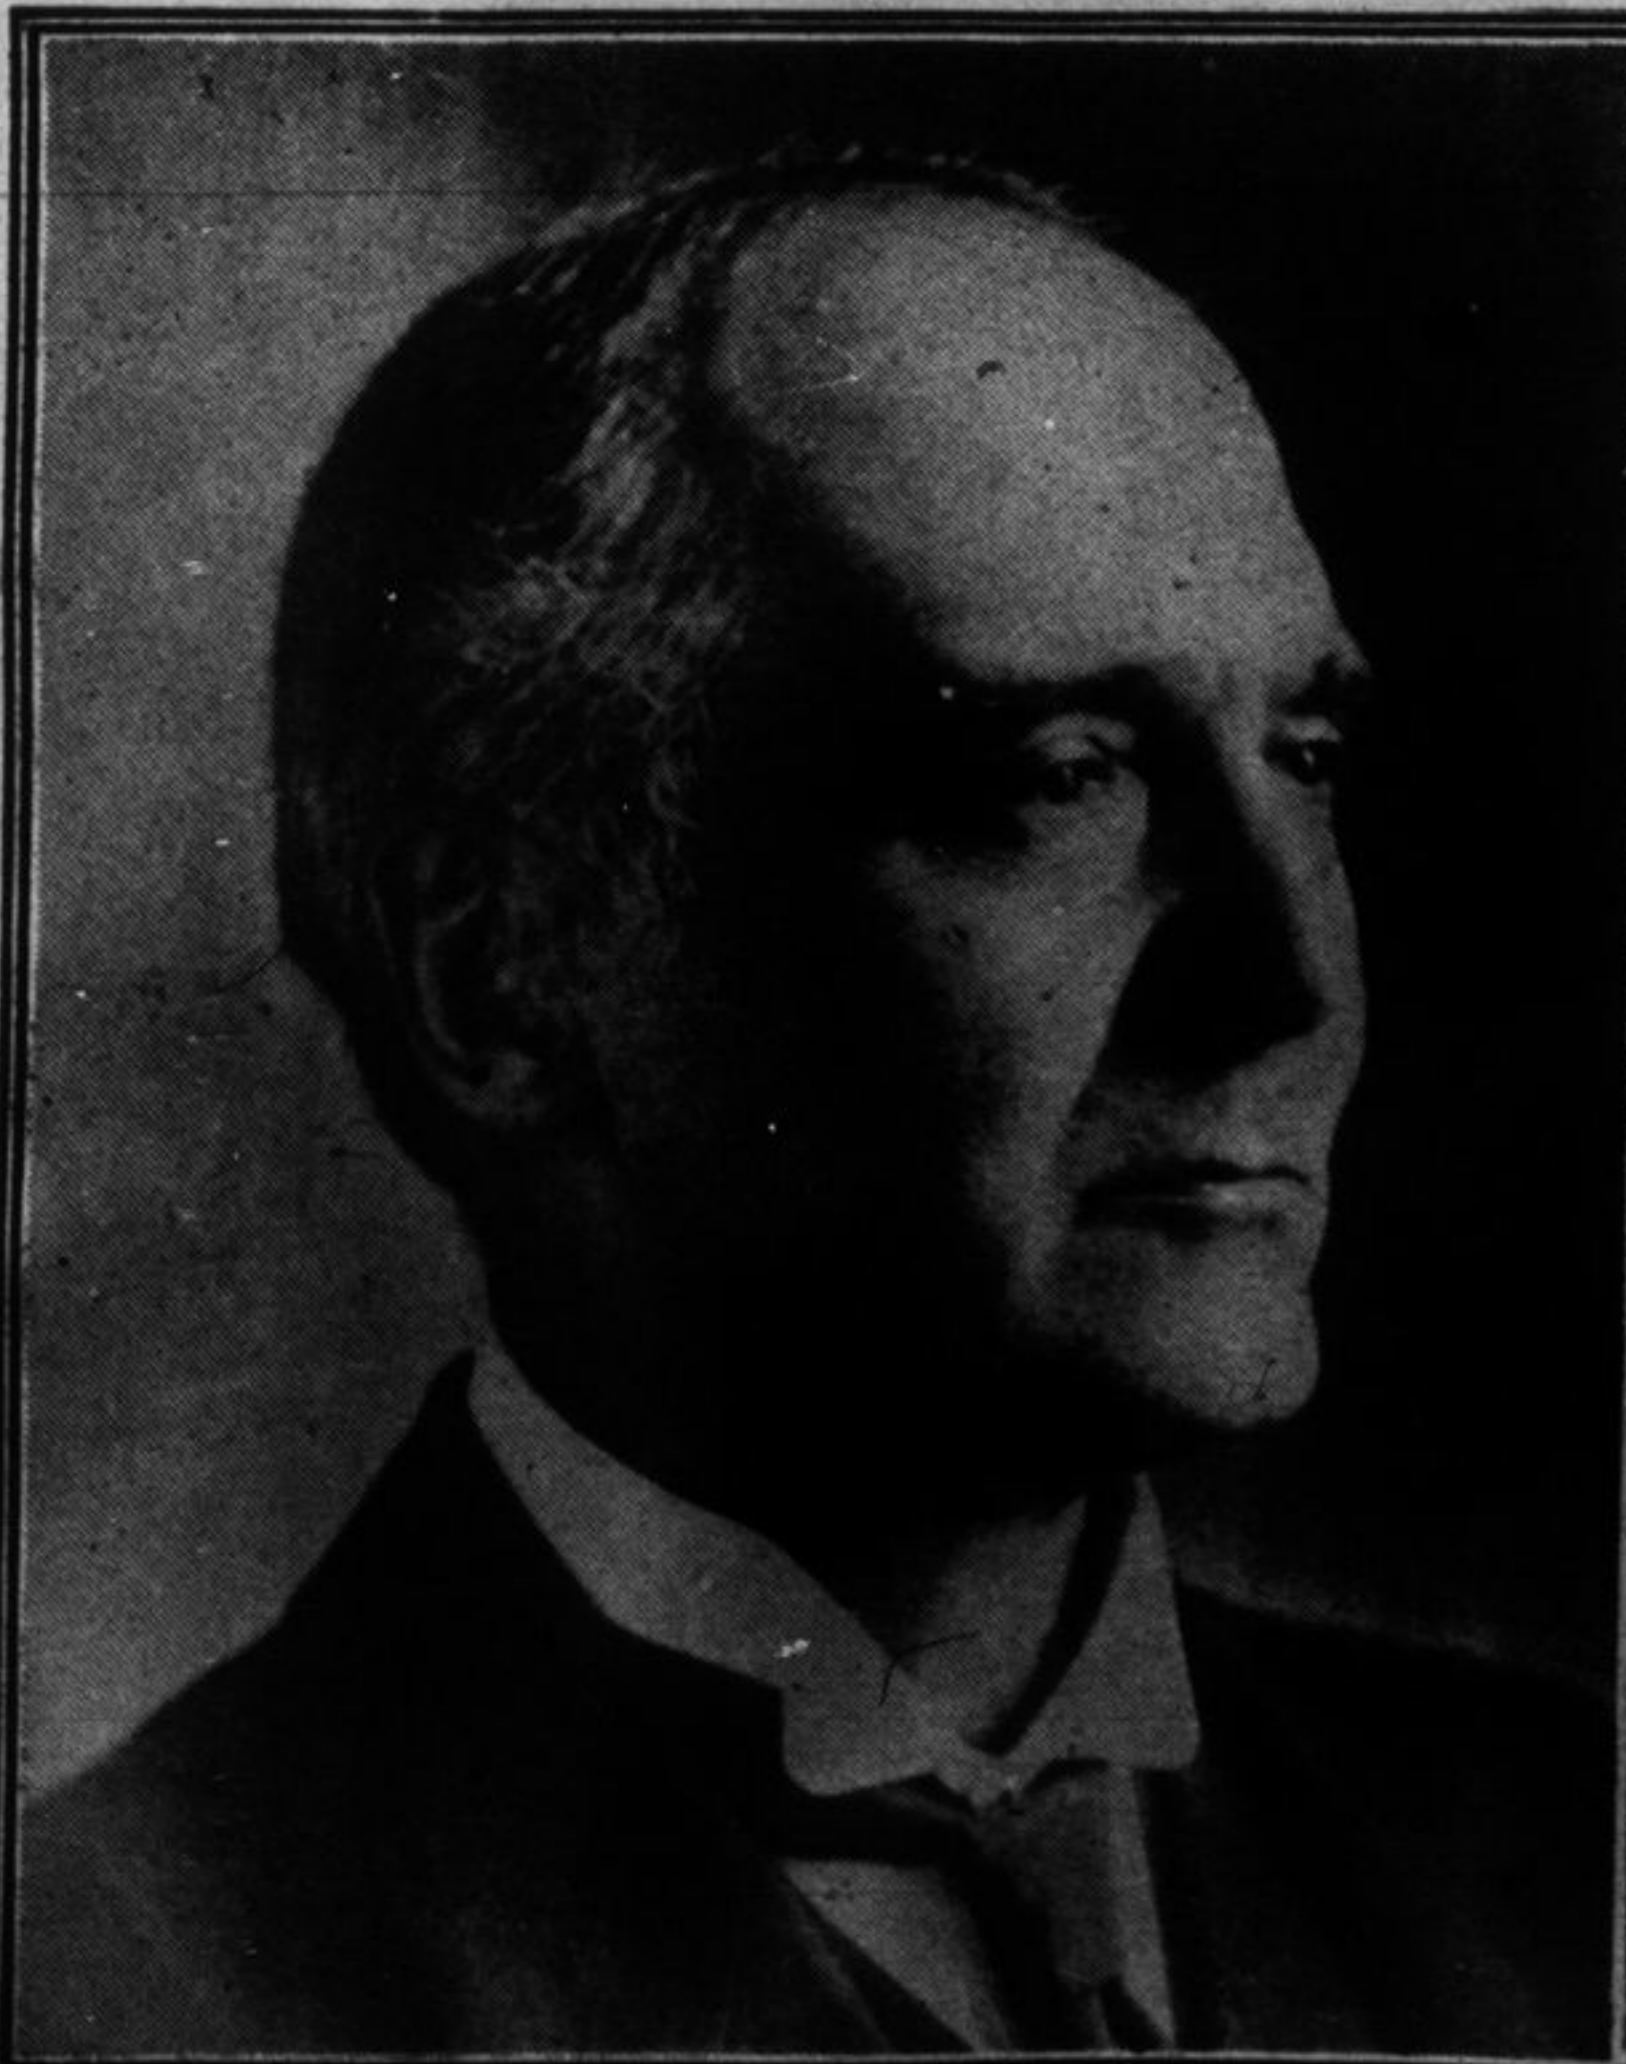

ON THE BRITISH WESTERN FRONT.
The sign shows the way clearly to the two towns, "Posieres and Bapaume," and the rest should be easy for the Allied troops. These towns have been the goal of the Allies since the July offensive.

MRS. LOUIS SHOTRIDGE
Who will accompany her husband on the Wanamaker Alaska expedition.

WANAMAKER EXPEDITION TO ALASKAN WILDS.—Louis Shotridge, Chilkat Indian, who with his wife, also an Indian, will have charge of the expedition which will go into the Alaskan wilds to discover new facts of the Alaskan tribes. They will gather ethnological specimens dating back to the stone age, and which are rapidly disappearing owing to the contact of Indians with white men. It is believed that this is the first expedition, for scientific purposes, ever headed by Indians, but it is doubtful if white men could obtain the information desired.

SHIPPING MUNITIONS TO THE ALLIES.
Large calibre shells on a barge alongside of the S. S. Baltic, ready to be loaded on board the steamer for France. Generally the shells are packed in cases, but in this instance they are being shipped in bulk.

SIR H. E. DUKE, SECRETARY FOR IRELAND.
Sir H. E. Duke, the new Secretary for Ireland, having succeeded Augustine Birrell, who resigned shortly after the Dublin uprising.

ROUMANIA AT LAST ENTERS WAR.
Roumanian cavalry and light artillery which are now fighting Austrian and Bulgarian troops.

FROM AVIATRIX TO DIVER.—Formerly an aviator, but made timid by death of her husband, also a flyer, Mrs. Alyn Bryant has turned to the hazardous occupation of deep sea diving, which can be classed as almost opposite of flying. Mrs. Bryant is but twenty-six years old, and has been working for three months in Seattle harbor. Capt. Fitch, an old diver, was her instructor.
