The idea of a "tonic" for baldness that is chronic is manifestly quite absurd. But when you are balding in quantities appalling, there's hope in that reassuring word.

HERPICIDE

Peel Off Your Freckles

To remove freckles, blotches, or any complexion difficulty, the best thing to do is to remove the skin itself. This is easily and harmlessly done by the application of ordinary mercurized wax. The wax peels off the defective outer skin, a little each day, gradually bringing the second layer of skin to view. The new skin is beautifully soft, clear, white and young looking. Just procure an ounce of mercurized wax at any drug store and use like cold cream.

FURS

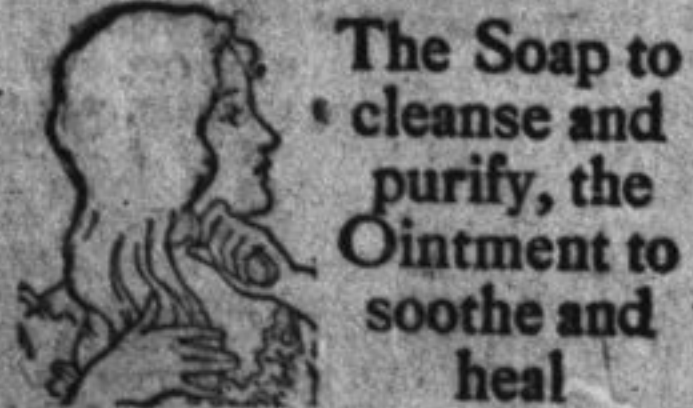

Fox, Seal-skin, Beaver, Ermine, etc., etc., can be cleaned very successfully, and in this connection it may be remarked that dry cleaning is also a splendid protection against moths.

We do not undertake the dyeing of furs.

THE CONFESSIONS OF ROXANE

(By Frances Walter)

WOULD THIS BE MY END?

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)
The question which came to me at the theatre was, Shall the logic of the author of this play prove the logic of my life? Would I permit myself to drift as this woman drifted? Would the end with me be the same as her end, so easily imagined and blighted?

I could see the couple in their old age, he going his way and she hers—nothing in common between them except the single tie of a common home. They slept under the same roof and were legally man and wife, but that was all. She thought of him only with impatience or outright anger, and he seldom thought of her at all. Somewhere the once young and gallant squire warmed a chair in a club, sipping gingerly of brandy and soda and occasionally dreaming of the golden hair and blue eyes and sly complexion of the girl he was "predestined" to wed.

Should my old age bring me such a lot? Should time, with its ruthless scythe, cut away from me all of those tender emotions which had been the source of my childhood's fancies? Should my heart wrinkle as my face and the sweetness of love turn to gall as my youth sped away?

And was the logic of the author the logic of morals or right living? Perhaps it was; perhaps it was not. Our life seems so intricately tangled with convention that it is hard at times to discern what is mere convention and what is the right. I once knew a mother who opposed her daughter setting up a home of her own because she feared friends might think she could not live with her son-in-law. Mrs. Tom, Mrs. Dick, Mrs. Harry ruled that woman's life, not by what Mrs. Tom or Mrs. Dick or Mrs. Harry said or did, but by what Mrs. X—feared they might think. Many a woman has continued to live with a man she did not love merely for fear of what the "world" would think. Strangely enough, it is usually the extremely weak or the extremely strong who defy convention. The rest of us remain in deathly fear of it from the days of our debut to the hours of our taking off.

It was convention which triumphed over love in the case of the heroine of "The Rose." It was fear of what others might say; fear of departing from the beaten path or society which compelled the poor love-torn wife to cling to the man she secretly scorned.

Was I a victim of the same force? I started as Mr. Gordon touched my arm.

"The Rose has faded," he said, with a strained smile. "We should be going."

That he spoke I hardly knew that the curtain had fallen and that man and woman all about me were chattering and leaving.

"It was simply terrible," exclaimed Mariam. "I shall have the creeps for a week. The idea of a woman having to find her own way out of such a tangle!"

"She seemed capable of taking care of herself," suggested Mr. Gordon lightly.

"I should say she might accomplish almost anything unaided."

"It was worse than melodrama," pouted Mariam. "And the terrible thing about it was its name. There was nothing to suggest a rose or any other kind of flower."

"Except the thorns," interposed Mr. Gordon.

"Oh, that was it, was it?" replied Mariam. "Well, there certainly were plenty of thorns, without the roses."

"I agree with Mariam," I forced myself to say. "It was melodrama."

"Which may be another way of saying it was probably true to life," said Mariam. "I am glad I do not have to live such a life at all events."

"So are we all," Mr. Gordon said. "But I make a motion that we forget the roses and the thorns and have some lobsters. I know a lobster place where all the lobsters one sees are on real china plates."

"It will be a relief to meet a real lobster in such a position," laughed Mariam. "I prefer those on china plates to the rather strained witicism, but it is the best I can do under the circumstances. That horrid play has got me all upset."

"It hasn't destroyed my appetite," volunteered Mr. Gordon.

"Nor mine," replied Mariam, but it upset me mentally. I do not understand how you and Roxane can see such plays and remain so unaffected."

"We were not unaffected," objected Mr. Gordon. "That is, I was not. Once or twice I reflected that it was fortunate that my shoes were tied on; otherwise I might have been tempted to hurl one at the misleading man."

"Now that is a real witicism," laughed Mariam. "It reminds me of that volume of 'Wit and Humor of the Eighteenth Century' which I got from the library the other day. Did you ever read it, Roxane? It will surprise you to learn that certain jokes are as old as they really are."

"To what do you refer?" demanded Mr. Gordon with dignity.

But Mariam ignored him, and turned ostentatiously to me.

"Why, of course," she cried. "That explains it! I did not hide that book. Almost any one who wanted to could have read it."

Whereupon we all laughed, which proved that we were unstrung or nervous or tired or irritated or something equally as disagreeable.

STATUE TO FIRST SLAIN.

Frenchmen Are Raising Funds for a Monument.

From the Mayor of Montbelliard, Doubs, France, Canadian papers have received an appeal to give publicity to a public subscription now being taken up in France and all the allied countries for a monument to Corporal Instructor Jules Andre Peugeot, of the 44th French Infantry, who was ordered by Lieut. Mayer, commandant of a reconnoitering party of the 5th Mulhouse Cavalry, thirty hours before his Government had declared war on France. The murder was committed at Joncherey, Canton de Delle, Haute-Rhin, France, at 10 o'clock on the morning of August 2. The German detachment had penetrated French territory by order of the German Government.

Corporal Peugeot was in command of an outpost at Joncherey. When the Germans approached he made the usual challenge. Mayer drew his service revolver and fired three times into the Frenchman's body. Mortally wounded, Peugeot managed to lift his rifle and slay his murderer. He was but 21 years of age, and a grandson of a famous colonel in the French army of the morning of August 2. His body was removed to his native village and interred beside that of his soldier forefather.

It is the intention of the Peugeot Monument Committee, which is composed of a number of illustrious Frenchmen, among whom are the Minister of War, and many Cabinet Ministers and Senators and Parliamentarians, to raise a magnificent monument to the memory of the first soldier to fall on the western front. The subscription has been opened in all the allied countries.

New Tax Means Big Revenue.

The new amendment law provided for by the Legislature last session is expected to produce considerably more than the estimate of $600,000 made by Hon. T. W. McGarry. The Provincial Treasurer stated recently that the revenue from the sale of tax tickets had averaged about $50,000 a month and would probably go above that mark from now on with the theatrical season in full swing.

The large sum being secured from the tax means that the Provincial Government, by tapping only one source of revenue open to them, will be able to make up two-thirds or more of the income surrendered by the adoption of war-time prohibition.

Hon. Mr. McGarry intimated that the Government had several plans under consideration for the expenditure of the two millions to be raised this year by the mill on the dollar war tax. This year, however, the Government has not resorted to the plan of borrowing against the tax, as was done last year. It will not, therefore, have the war tax revenue at hand until the end of the present year.

Kettle Valley Railway.

Some industrial changes are likely to occur in southern British Columbia as the result of the opening of the Kettle Valley Railway a few days ago. The railway itself connects Nelson with Vancouver. The rate upon coal from Princeton to Vancouver would be $10 per ton compared with $2 previously. Possibilities in metal mining are now partially developed give every indication of being good "producers." In the Princeton district the British Columbia Copper Company is developing several properties. Hitherto one of the great difficulties has been the high cost of getting in freight and supplies. Now that railway facilities are available the miners as well as the settlers in the territory served will have an opportunity to get their supplies through to markets at a cost that is nearer to a practical level.

1,800 Automobiles Ferried.

A record was established at Windsor on Labor Day, when more than 1,800 automobiles were ferried across Detroit River from the Michigan side. This is the greatest number handled in any single day since this interchange of auto licenses became effective four months ago. The increased traffic was due to the Windsor race meeting and also to the fact that it was a general holiday on both sides of the river.

Two more States, Missouri and Iowa, have been added to the list of States with which Ontario motor licenses are interchangeable. There are now fourteen States of the Union which have agreed to reciprocity in this matter with Ontario.

Combination with Circular Skirt.

To meet the demands of wider skirts this combination consisting of corset cover and three piece skirt is designed. It is trimmed with lace and embroidery.

Whenever the lines of dresses change decidedly, the influence of the change is noted in lingerie. A dainty combination is shown here exploiting the new circular petticoat. The corset cover may be cut with round or square outline and the skirt is a three-piece design. The combination may be made of satin, batiste, lawn or crepe. Provision is also made for a short sleeve for the corset cover, many women preferring this to shield. In medium size the combination requires 3 1/2 yards 36 inch material, with 1 yard of edging and 2 1/2 yards insertion. In addition to the lace a delicate embroidery design is worked on the front of the corset cover. As the embroidery design contains thirty-six sprays, a part of it may be used on the skirt if desired.

The back gore of the petticoat is pieced and this section of the pattern should be laid on a lengthwise thread of the material when cutting, as shown in the guide. The tiny little section on which the arrow is placed is the piecing for the back gore. Next comes the front of the corset cover, placed on a lengthwise thread of the goods, then the back, laid on the lengthwise fold. Along the selvage edge the lap is placed, while the front gore of the petticoat is laid on the lengthwise fold to the right of the back.

To make the petticoat, slash through the fold at center front of front gore, from upper edge to large edge, and slash to position. Join gores as notched, close center-back seam. Turn hem at lower edge on small "o" perforations. Sew to lower edge of corset cover, center-fronts and center-backs even bringing side seam to small "o" perforation in front.

The corset cover is so simple to make that the home dressmaker will not experience any trouble with it.
