FIVE DEAD HEROES HONORED

IMPRESSIVE MEMORIAL SERVICE IN QUEEN ST. CHURCH.

Gen. Hemming Placed Laurel Wreath on Scroll Containing Names of Five Members of Young Men's Club, Who Have Made Supreme Sacrifice

A touching tribute was paid Sunday morning in Queen Street Methodist Church to the memory of five members of the Young Men's Club who, on the far-off battlefields of Europe, have laid down their lives for the cause of humanity. The pastor, Rev. J. D. Ellis, spoke with sympathetic pride of the departed heroes and Gen. Hemming placed a laurel wreath on a black-enshrouded scroll containing the names of the five of precious memory. The men whose worthy lives and noble deaths were so fittingly honored were:

- Robert H. Campbell.
- W. S. Earle.
- William W. Fleet.
- Neil Ferguson.
- Louis W. Roadhouse.

The commodious church was filled and all seemed to feel the splendid and inspiring solemnity of the hour. The largeness of the congregation was an evidence of the popularity of those who have answered the last roll call, and an expression of appreciation of the glorious sacrifice they have made.

The Sermon.

The pastor delivered an impressive discourse from Hebrews xi, 13: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." In applying the text the preacher said that many soldiers had died during the present struggle without having received the promises of victory, but they had seen them afar off. All good soldiers, he declared, had not necessarily been good citizens. On the other hand, men who were accounted good citizens did not make good soldiers. It had been said that every soldier who made the supreme sacrifice received a passport to heaven. Such a statement, however, was too sweeping. Many men who had been down and out, who could hardly keep out of prison, had enlisted because they did not fit in anywhere else. A man was not a saint because he had enlisted. Donning a uniform did not make him good in every way. No, a good soldier had not always been a good citizen.

Better Men For Enlisting.

But the soldier was invariably a better man than he was when a civilian. The brightest and best in men were called out under stress. The linking of men to a lofty cause made for heroism and immortality. All men who had gone forth to war were the better for having gone. Men returning from the trenches said there was no irreligion there. As they stood on the battle line men were face to face with God, and all desired to be good. No man could link himself with the cause of Britain, her allies and fight for the world's advancement without becoming a better man.

The tragedies of this terrible war were daily brought home to Canadians. The shell that closed a protesting life in the death-haunted trenches thousands of miles away, cruelly touched some Canadian mother's heart. Many brave lads had fallen in battle, and many others would fall, but not without hope.

The Noble Five.

The preacher then referred to the five men whose names were being honored. Of Robert H. Campbell's antecedents little was known, but he was a young man of fine character. W. S. Earle, whose home had been in Belleville, was a student at Queen's, and had been president of the Young Men's Club of Queen Street church. William W. Fleet, whose parents were valued members of the church had been officially reported dead a few months ago, after having been missing for over a year. He was a loyal worker, and only recently a memorial service had been held in his honor.

A more extended reference was made to Louis W. Roadhouse and Neil Ferguson, whose earthly careers were closed last month. A letter from the former's nurse was read. It said that the dead soldier had been admitted to the hospital on the morning of the 27th of September, having been severely wounded in the abdomen by a shell. When brought in he was in a state of collapse, and was only conscious of and on. When conscious he asked the nurse to write to his people, sending his love and telling them that he hoped to be home soon. In the afternoon he began to sink and passed peacefully away at 5.15. He was tenderly buried; the nurse concluded, and his grave would be carefully kept.

"He was a worthy boy and gave himself up in a worthy cause," was the preacher's tribute. A letter was read from Lieut. Gilman, of the Overseas Signallers, who paid a beautiful tribute to the worth of Neil Ferguson, who was only seventeen when he enlisted with the 21st Battalion. The writer stated that the youthful hero had always proved himself a worthy companion. He was fearless and courageous to a degree, and was one of the best men in the section. While at work at headquarters he was struck by a shell in the thigh and it was thought at first that he would recover, but gangrene set in, and as the wound was near the hip it was impossible to save his life. A letter from a Wesleyan Methodist chaplain was read telling of the burial of young Ferguson. He was buried with full military honors and ecclesiastical honors, and his grave and memory would ever be kept green.

"These men," said the preacher in conclusion, "have died not feeling the fulfillment of the cause for which they struggled, but they saw the promises from afar. They have died, but others will die for their sakes."

Gen. Hemming Placed Wreath. Gen. Hemming then placed the wreath on the draped roll of honor, saying as he did so: "I place this wreath as a token of respect and I trust that the memories of these young men will ever be kept green in the remembrances of this congregation. I trust, further, that the noble example of these young men who have paid the supreme sacrifice will encourage other young men of the congregation to lay down their lives, if necessary, for the great cause and help bring the war to a speedy conclusion and a complete victory for the Allies."

Gen. Hemming, Capt. Kidd, A. D. C., and City Engineer McClelland, president of the Young Men's Club, occupied seats on the platform.

During the service a quartette composed of Joseph Hodge, John Marshall, A. J. Pettigrew and Edward Pound sang with fine effect "The Christian's Good-Night," and the choir rendered "Blessed Are the Dead."

IN THE HALLS OF QUEEN'S

AN IMPORTANT MEETING OF THE A. M. S. WAS HELD.

Decided That Five Dances and an "At Home" Will Take Place During Session—Results of Arts Society Elections.

There were a number of important questions before the Alma Mater Society on Saturday night, and Convocation Hall was well filled with students.

J. H. Dawson brought in an interesting report concerning the work of the Athletic Committee during the summer session. He stated that the committee had an offer for the land north of the athletic grounds, and that if the deal was put through the money would prove very acceptable. He also remarked that there was a possibility that the Athletic Committee might not rent the skating ring for the coming season, as the receipts had not been as large as were expected. However, this and other important matters will be discussed, and reports will be presented later.

Mr. Dawson also said that he has a plan for the systematizing of the bookkeeping of the various athletic clubs, and it is expected that this will be a more difficult task. A report from the executive committee, recommending that the use of Grant Hall be given to the Aesculapian Society for a farewell dance to be held on the evening before the medical faculty convocation was adopted.

The date of the Alma Mater Society elections was also changed. Owing to the fact that the medical students will be on their holidays at the regular time of the elections, it was decided that they should be held on the second Saturday in December.

The question of dances and rushes also came in for some discussion. It was agreed that the social functions should be fewer this session than is stated in the constitution of the Alma Mater Society, and that besides the medical farewell dance there should be three faculty dances, the conversation, and an "At Home" for the members of the Aesculapian faculty.

As to rushes, it was decided that a committee consisting of the presidents and secretaries of the faculty societies, along with the president of the A. M. S., G. F. McFadden, E. A., and H. H. Sheldon should confer with the Senate, and definite rules should be drawn up to deal with this phase of university activity.

A most enjoyable programme was prepared by the Levaia Society, consisting of a reading by Miss May Gemill, a solo by Miss Marjorie Henderson, a piano solo by Miss Winnifred Hay, a vocal duet by Miss Jessie McArthur and Miss Mary Wertz, and a violin solo by Miss Jean Johnson.

The annual election of the executive of the Arts Society was held on Saturday morning and resulted as follows: Hon. president, Prof. John Matheson, M.A.; president, J. H. Sissons; vice-president, W. G. Cornett; secretary, G. E. Marshall; assistant secretary, W. H. Dunlop; treasurer, H. P. Cliffe; auditor, T. P. Love; critic, R. H. Fisher; committee, H. H. Sheldon, A. L. Greenless, J. H. McLeod, E. H. May.

The election of officers for the Arts Concursus Iniquitatis et Virtutis was also held, the following being elected: Junior Judge, P. A. McDougall; senior prosecuting attorney, H. P. Cliffe; sheriff, C. W. Butcher; clerk, H. A. McLeod; chief of police, H. P. Cliffe; junior prosecution attorney, W. E. Rankin; crier, W. Carroll; constables, J. W. Sutherland, A. Stinson, W. G. Cornett, S. Fraser, G. S. Pixley, A. N. Baker, H. T. Carmichael, J. Macdonnell.

The Queen's University contingent C. O. T. C., paraded on Saturday afternoon at the university grounds, and marched to Barrfield commons, where some interesting practical applications of the lectures being given, were carried out. These included work on the conduct of a company in attack and defence. The parade was under the command of Capt. G. W. Mitchell.

The tennis courts at the university were filled all day Saturday, and several very interesting games were played. The second round of the tennis tournament is not yet completed.

Several members of the cyclist platoon recruited in the college in the spring spent the week-end in the city renewing acquaintances.

J. J. Rigney Thanked. T. J. Rigney of this city, who acted as prosecuting attorney at the Assizes in Ottawa last week, was thanked by the Grand Jury in their report, for the ample manner in which he had handled the cases.
