THE CONFESSIONS OF ROXANE (By Frances Walter)

I CONCLUDED THAT I HAD NO CAUSE FOR ALARM (Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

I had a good opportunity, while Arthur was at the theatre with Evelyn Phillips and her father, to take an inventory of my domestic affairs, and I proceeded to do so, although there was nothing deliberate or intentional about it.

As I searched my heart and peered from the misty past into the dim future I was compelled to admit that there were no romantic hues in either direction.

I had feared the influence of Evelyn Phillips on Arthur from the first night I saw her, and those fears, I thought now, were certainly well founded.

I was aware, and I still know from later observation, that in rare instances a girl may be so deliberate enough to marry herself off for some motive other than love, and such a woman (despite her age, one cannot call her a girl) will stop at nothing to accomplish her purpose.

The question which confronted me, was, Is Evelyn such a woman? Has she fixed her heart upon gaining my husband's love and tearing him away from me?

Suddenly I laughed outright. Was it possible that I was permitting my nerves to get the better of me? I scoffed at the idea that Evelyn desired my husband.

FOR FRIENDLESS SOLDIERS

Rev. A. L. Fraser of Smith's Falls Writes Poem.

Rev. Alexander Louis Fraser, Westminster Manse, Smith's Falls, has written a splendid little poem for use of T. Pearson in his work of providing friends for friendless soldiers overseas.

"Kin Unknown" No mother wept when thou didst take thy leave, No home, hopes now in vain for thy return, No saddened family for months shall grieve, When from some messenger thy fate they learn, Still thou art not unclaimed, for Britain knows That thou didst cross the world for sake of her, And thou, brave boy, art brother to all those Whom Freedom doth in those scarred fields inter, What was it made thee quit thy customary task, When War's shrill bugle woke thy quiet vale? Wouldst thou begin anew?—in vain we ask, But now where worth is known they bid thee "Hail!" And what if to this old world wast strange, Down storied fields with heroes thou dost range.

Good for the Teeth. Dental experts have recently been dwelling on the importance of developing the jaw bones and muscles, thus giving the teeth ample opportunity for development. Chewing gum serves to strengthen the face and jaw muscles, exercising the teeth, massaging the gums and removing particles of food that lodge in or between the teeth, causing decay.
