

How Nations Are Solving the Perplexities of a World's War

HANDLING WOUNDED UNDER DIFFICULTIES. Stretchers are often lowered down the sides of cliffs a hundred or more feet high. Soldiers wounded in the more remote parts of Italy's mountain line are frequently several days in reaching a railroad. In some places they are transported across impassable ravines in aerial cars suspended from cables.

MEMORIAL TO EDITH CAVELL. Tablet to Edith Cavell, the martyred British nurse, who was executed in Belgium by the Germans, recently unveiled at Shoreditch, England. (Upper photo.)

Fighting the Fight and Burying the Dead on Both Fronts

CHARGING OVER AN ALMOST IMPASSABLE ROUTE. Italian soldiers scrambling over jagged rocks in a charge against an Austrian position blown up by a mine. Italians and Austrians have carried on the most laborious of campaigns, Italian successes being greatest along the Isonso River.

GERMAN PRISONERS DIGGING GRAVES FOR THE DEAD SOLDIERS. German prisoners captured near Verdun, who have been compelled to dig graves to bury soldiers who have fallen in defence of the fortress. It is noticed that the German soldier bears little resentment toward his captors.
