are in no small measure due to Great Britain's mistaken support of the ungrateful Turk. After the war of 1877 she helped rob Russia of the fruits of her victory. Russia consoled herself by bothering her enemy in the East. On the Indian border, in Afghanistan, in Beluchistan, everywhere, Russian intrigue and Russian force were felt or suspected. So Disraell worked steadily into the hands of Bismarck. So for years England oleon chuckled. Since the Entente of 1907, more especially since war, the Russian bugaboo has faded. He says: 'Campbell left here about the first of December for his trip of the winter, on the way down, and about 120 miles down the river, he encountered slush and got his feet wet. The day was intensely cold, and soon both feet were frozen-one, to the ankle. With this impediment he continued on his way, reaching Fort Vermillion in thirteen days, and staying there but thirty hours before returning to Peace River. Campbell aims to make the trip each month, and so there was no time to lose. On the return journey he covered the same route by which he went, and when suffering. Meanwhile, his clothing air another team. Happily, he managed to do this, and, continuing the trip, arrived little the worse for his hardship, on the 4th, of January." C. W. A Question of Loyalty. From time to time certain Conservative papers of the city of Toronto, such as the News, Telegram and Orange Sentinel, have , taken occasion to suggest that the Liberal Provincial governments of the three prairie provinces depend in large measure for their support at the polls upon what these papers are pleased to call "the Austro-German vote" with the very definite suggestion that the disloyality of these Liberal governments is what secures for them the support of the disloyal "Austro-Germans."
