

High Notes in the Scale of Fashions Created for Spring Wear

Women whose requirements in dress are uncompromisingly exacting and who place their stamp of appreciation only upon originality and individuality, should have no complaint to make of the fashions for spring. They were, never so diversified, yet simple, as for the coming season, and these features are emphasized even in the realm of millinery. Some of the new frocks are radical in line, but they are altogether charming and simplicity is never sacrificed for ornamentation.

The sports influence is truly one to be reckoned with, for sports apparel of all kinds will continue to hold a very important place in every woman's mind and wardrobe. Most of the younger women will probably elect to regard such costumes as perfectly proper for forenoon functions of all kinds and for street wear, as well as on the golf course, at the tennis court and on the beach.

While the impression of diversity is intensified by the color schemes of many new creations, there is still a great demand for white and white and black combinations are among the smartest of the season. Unusually interesting is the development of a little white flannel frock. The waist is made in blouse effect, the round neck being bound with heavy white silk and finished with a collar of black toulard. The collar appears only at the sides and back of the blouse, in deference to the new neckline at the front. Narrow folds of the toulard are stitched upon the front of the blouse and in original fashion upon the long gathered sleeves. The skirt is a four-piece affair, gathered at the sides, but plaited front and back in panel effect.

For southern wear there are many attractive frocks in dark blue and brown linen. Strictly speaking, pure flax linens are scarce on account of the war, but there are many handsome union fabrics parading under the name of linen which give satisfactory service and are quite reasonable in price. Few combinations are prettier than wedgewood blue linen and white batiste. A frock of irresistible charm in which this idea is carried out has a peplum blouse which is worn over a simple gathered skirt, with the side gores laid in plaits on each side of the front and back gores, forming panels. The blouse fastens on the left shoulder and under the left arm, the front being cut away to expose an expansive vest of white hemstitched batiste. The turn-down collar is of batiste, also the trills at the wrists of the flare sleeves.

A real old-fashioned combination is shown in a foulard frock striped with apple green and old rose. There is a deep band of self-material running around the lower edge of the straight skirt, but it terminates at the front so as not to interfere with the straight line of the panel. The waist is notable because of its simplicity, being trimmed only with a few tucks at the shoulders. Revers, vest, collar, belt and cuffs are of plain rose colored silk.

Not by any means mill the swaggy girl have things all her own way this season, for there are plenty of costumes which less striking women can wear becomingly. A good example of the conservative sports-suit is carried out in silk jersey. The blouse has a very large, impressionistic pattern printed in two shades of brown. The collar and deep cuffs are of natural color jersey to match the skirt and the buttons and bindings for the pockets are also of jersey. There is a belt of brown ribbon, finished at the end with heavy silk tassels.

Ribbons have received the sanction of the highest fashion authorities and are to be in great vogue during the spring and summer. Not for many seasons have so many new designs been presented, the majority of which are of unusual merit. The range of patterns includes ideas which correspond to practically all of the leading fashion notes in dresses and waists, be they Chinese, Russian Grecian or what not. The rich, soft shades found in rare tapestries and old rugs are characteristic of many of the high-class novelties. Even in the medium priced ribbons colors are combined with unusual taste and skill.

Chinese blue ribbon is used skillfully in the sash arrangement of a simple frock of light pink challis. The front of the waist extends below the waistline and has the skirt gathered to it and the ribbon sash passes under this front extension, crosses at the back, and is brought around to the side where it is tied in a knot the ends finished with fringe.
