

Told in the Twilight --- In the Realm of Woman

AN ECONOMICAL LUNCH

Take a few Oxo Cubes and save the expense of lunching out. A cup of Oxo and a few biscuits, or a sandwich, make a light inexpensive meal which will keep you satisfied and clear-headed until your next repast.

A cup of Oxo is always good. It can be made with an Oxo Cube and hot water with very little trouble. When you reach home after a hard day at the office, a cup of hot Oxo will do you ever so much good, and lessen the risk of a chill.

An Oxo Cube in a glass of hot milk makes a pleasant change.

ITCHING BURNING ECZEMA ON EARS

Healed by Cuticura Trial Free

"I had been suffering from eczema for a long time. It affected the back of my ears which were all a mass of scales. It was red and unsightly and caused itching and burning which was so severe that it was impossible to keep from scratching. My mother spoke of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I got a cake of Soap and a box of Ointment, and I was healed." (Signed) Miss G. Bertrand, Botha, Alberta, July 15, 1915.

THE CONFESSIONS OF ROXANE

(By Frances Walter)

ANOTHER GREAT TROUBLE DARKE'S JANE'S LIFE

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)
"It is not my intention," resumed Jane, "to tell you in detail all of the ups and downs of my life. I have told you merely enough to acquaint you with my connection with the Pendleton family. Naturally I felt under obligation to old Mr. Pendleton for his support and care and in later time this obligation was transferred to Harry. But my gratitude was not strong enough to compel me to stand guard over a kidnapped woman. Just how Harry obtained this control over me may be inferred from a few instances of my later life, which I shall relate briefly.

"My marriage was an unhappy one. It could hardly have been otherwise, because I married to keep from being dependent any longer upon Harry. The man who won me was a roisterer who lived not far from the Pendleton home and whose only purpose in life seemed to be to spend as quickly as possible his patrimony. His wife had obtained such a hold upon him that he realized that he could not reform without assistance and he pleaded with me to give him the needed help by marrying him. There was something attractive about his bold, dashing personality, and his evident affection for me combined with his entreaties and my own desire to be no longer a burden to Harry, resulted finally in my accepting his offer.

"As happens in so many marriages of this kind, my husband's reformation lasted only a few weeks. He then plunged even more deeply into excesses. I clung to him at first with the fond hope that he might still be able to reform him, and later because my allegiance to him had cut me off from all other associates and had branded me with the same iron that had seared him. My hopes were revived about a year later by the birth of a son. It seemed to me that if anything could stop my husband's dissipation this would, but even this hope was vain and I realized then that he had reached the point where reformation was impossible. Nevertheless I clung to him, sharing his roof until his creditors took it away from him. What might have become of me and my child then no one knows, but at this juncture remorse over his misdeeds and the hopeless future staring him in the face proved too much for him. I found his body one morning in the bath room, where he had shot himself. A few minutes afterwards the movers came to carry away the furniture which had been sold under the hammer.

"I do not think that I would have had the temerity to ask Harry Pendleton for a home, even though I had a young son dependent upon me. Harry was just then preparing for a trip around the world, and I supposed that he had little time for anyone's affairs except his own. Imagine my surprise and relief, therefore, when he entered the house along with the moving men, bundled my boy and myself into his car and, without asking me any questions whatever, carried us away to the old Pendleton home. A few days later he sailed for Europe and I was left in charge of his house. There I devoted myself to the care and education of my son, who grew rapidly more and more like his father.

"Harry was abroad several years and during that time I continued not only to look after his interests at the home, but also the interests which he had in the city. When he returned he told me that he had decided to live in town, but that my son and I might occupy the old home as long as I wished.

"From that time on I saw little of him. My son, nearly 16 years old, had entered the same training school which Harry had attended, and it was my purpose to send him later to the university. But alas for my dreams! My boy had not been in school more than a month before he came back in disgrace. The taint of his father's blood was in his veins. He was not only becoming a heavy drinker, but a thief as well. "No one except a mother knows what it costs a parent to admit that her son is a crook. This man has been mine not once, but many times, so that at last I am so hardened to the fact that I confess it without any emotion whatever." (To Be Continued.)

Enemies of Tea

If tea is left open near oranges, soap, spices, matches, etc., the tea will take on the flavor of any of these articles.

In fact, tea absorbs odors as readily as does butter. This is because of the high temperature at which it is "fired" during the drying process, which makes the tea very sensitive. It thus quickly loses flavor and strength, and goes "flat" if left exposed to odors, dust or air.

To Protect the Consumer

When you buy a package of Red Rose Tea at your grocer's you get the benefit of the great care we take to protect the consumer, as the sealed package is an armor that keeps out odors, dust and air. It keeps the tea pure, clean, fresh and full strength.

The price printed on the package protects you against overcharge. It is the lowest price for which a tea of Red Rose quality can be sold—a price which allows the grocer only a fair profit.

You will enjoy the distinctive flavor, rich strength and splendid economy of Red Rose Tea. TRY A PACKAGE.
