A Railway Dog.

At a station on a railway somewhere in Australia the stationmaster owns a little dog, known as an Australian terrier. This little dog is very intelligent and most businesslike. He constitutes himself joint, or perhaps chief, guardian of the place. It is the habit of this dog to spend nearly all the hours of the day looking after failway matters. He runs along the platform and meets incoming trains, barking uproariously at the engine, and then as the train leaves the station he barks just as AND ERUPTIONS noisily at the guard's van, running along the platform to see it safely off the premises. - Sometimes both stationmaster and dog begin the 'day's work as early as 5 o'clock in the morning, and in that case the stationmaster takes some lunch with him to refresh himself at about halfhis meal, when the dog reminds him of the fact by barking in a certain way known to man and dog. It happens occasionally that the dog, perhaps remembering a bone waiting for him at home, jumps into a train on his own account-one that is passing by where he lives-and so is carried home, about a mile away and when he feels like it, he gets into another train and is carried back to the scene of his doggy activities. The stationmaster says that Mr. Terrier is very often a traveler by train
