

Sights in Redeemed France - European War Conditions in New York

America experiencing European conditions. Women are now running elevators at the Park Avenue and Martha Washington Hotels in New York. Manager Brown says he is going to profit by the mistakes of British hotelkeepers in war time, and this is a beginning.

Much discussion has arisen over the maimed soldier problem. That it is rapidly losing all its difficulties is apparent from the reports of those in charge. France has done exceedingly well in this line, and the photograph shows a French soldier learning the carpenter's trade.

The Cathedral in Bombed Solsons.—This building has suffered like that of Rheims from the enemy guns, with its statues broken and windows destroyed. On March 23rd, the train service from the Gare du Nord, Paris to Solsons, was resumed, a sign that the French armies were reclaiming their land.

Here is another view typifying women workers. They are employed along with their elevator sisters as mentioned in a previous picture. Their duties consist of everything the male porter used to do, and for a while travellers had hopes that their luggage would receive kinder treatment, but no such luck. (Upper photo.)
