THE CONFESSIONS OF ROXANE

(By Frances Walter)

EDWARD CONCLUDES HIS STORY AND I DECIDE TO GO TO HIS WIFE.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate).

"After I became convinced that my wife would not become party to an agreement to nullify our marriage I returned to New York to see you," Edward continued, still addressing Sylvia. "The first thing I did after leaving the train was to telephone your home. They told me that you had not been there for several days, but the replies I received to my other questions were so vague and aluminating that I hurried to your uncle's home. There I learned the worst. "From that time on until now my life has been a nightmare. I have been unable to sleep or think or do anything that is normal human being does in the ordinary course of his daily life. My one passion has been to find you, yet so completely had you been swallowed up that I could find no trace of you. I employed detective after detective and they searched every nook and corner of this city without one clue as to your whereabouts. "Yet I refused to believe that you were dead. I went to your uncle and told him that we were engaged to wed, but he would make no move. He was convinced that you had committed suicide and that was all there was to it so far as he was concerned. After that I attempted to apply myself to my business in the hope that I could forget the misery which had come upon me, but I found that I could not keep my mind upon any subject and gave myself up to roaming the streets in the hope that some-time, somewhere, somehow, I should meet you. "But as you know I had no success. My father-in-law, who had learned something of my trouble from his daughter, attached himself to me and became my personal body-guard. He was fearful that I would either go mad or would try to kill myself. It has been like this with me when I met you this evening. I think he has always believed that my search for you would be in vain and that sooner or later I would give it up and return to my wife. Therefore, when I at last did find you and when he saw that my affection for you was deeper than it ever has been,

he became furious. I know now that I can expect no aid from him in my effort to induce his daughter to divorce me. They will hold me to the law, if for no other reason than to vent their spite. My position seems indeed hopeless. "As he paused, Sylvia arose and went swiftly to him. Twining her arms about his neck, she drew his face down to hers and kissed him. "Nothing is hopeless as long as we are together," she said. "Hope revived when we met. There must be some way, and if there were not, we still can be happy, for we are together. Thank Heaven, those cruel days of our separation are over. What you have told me is terrible, but I shall make you forget all your suffering. Even if the law holds you to her, love shall bind you to me, and what do we care for anything except love?" He took her face between his hands, gazing sadly into her eyes, and kissed her reverently on the forehead. "Dear little girl!" he said brokenly. "It watched them for a moment through the mist which had gathered before my eyes, and then slipped out of the room. When I returned they were seated on the sofa, her head resting contentedly on his shoulder and his arms about her. I walked over to my desk, picked up the document which I had insisted Edward write for Sylvia's protection and tore it to pieces. "We shall not need this," I told him. "Your statement was proof enough of your love for my little friend, and I am quite sure that you will carry out any promise you have made, if it is possible for you to do so. He bowed absently as I went on. "Possibly I should not seek to interfere in this affair, but I have a plan which, if neither of you object, I shall proceed to put into execution. "What is it?" asked Edward. "It will not offend you if I offer my assistance?" "No, indeed!" exclaimed Sylvia tearfully. "I propose to go to your wife and obtain her consent to divorce you!" I exclaimed, addressing Edward. (To be Continued.)

NO MORE CANS FOR BEANS AND SOUPS

Entire Output of Tin Containers Taken Over For Fighting Forces.

Washington, May 17.—American consumers will have to deny themselves canned beans and soups of all kinds for a time, under a decision of the War Cans Committee, which cuts off the supply of cans to packers of these foods. The committee, comprising tinplate manufacturers, can manufacturers, tanners and government officials, holds that the shortage of tins makes it imperative that cans be supplied only to packers of perishables and of foods absolutely necessary to the national existence. The order will be effective for sixty days and perhaps longer, and will be put into operation over the vigorous protest of the bean and soup packers, who declare it means ruin for their business.

JEWIS DRIVEN OUT.

News of Expulsion From Jaffa Officially Confirmed.

London, May 17.—The previous rumors that the whole Jewish population had been expelled from Jaffa were confirmed from official sources yesterday. During the Passover feast they were expelled and forced in a northerly direction. With the connivance of the Turkish authorities, the Jewish population were robbed during their flight, their homes destroyed, and property sacked. Those who resisted pillage were hanged. Thousands wandered along the roads hopeless and starving, misery being increased by diseases. Among those deported to an unknown destination are masses of young Jews from Jerusalem.

PROPOSAL REJECTED.

No German Prisoners Being Brought to Canada.

London, May 17.—In the House of Commons Mr. Wiles asked if the Canadian Government had been consulted regarding the advantage of transporting German prisoners of war in ships bound for Canada, partially loaded, and regarding the employment of such Germans in work of national importance in Canada. Under Secretary Hope, replying for the Government, said the Governments on both sides had considered such a proposal, but that it had been rejected. Several municipalities throughout the province are proposing to take advantage of the amendment to the Ontario Temperance Act last session, permitting municipalities to pass a by-law restricting the sale of 2 1/2 per cent. beverages to standard hotels within the municipality.

FINAL INSPECTION VISIT

OF HOSPITAL COMMISSION OFFICIALS TO QUEEN'S.

The Big Hospital in the University Ground Will Very Soon be Ready to Receive Convalescents.

Several officials of the Military Hospitals Commission paid final inspection visits during the past week to the new hospital for bed cases at Kingston, which is ready to be occupied as soon as one or two new items of equipment now under order are delivered. Two of the finest of the group of grey stone structures which compose Queen's University have been turned over to the Commission for the care of the stragglers of wounded returning from England. The Arts Building and the adjoining Grant Hall, the beautiful Convention hall, have required few alterations—none structurally—to render them suitable for the soldiers, but are being furnished with the stream of temporary partitions to prevent damage being done by troublesome inmates to the much prized art work on the walls. To nobody's hand could this task more appropriately have fallen than those of the Commission's chief architect and engineer, Captain W. L. Symons, who originally designed Grant Hall. He recognized at once that the sombre beauty of the oak panels and similar decorative work was not suitable for a hospital and cheery tints have been substituted on the temporary partitions. Accommodation for 450 active treatment cases has been provided in the two buildings referred to, and adjoining them has been erected a temporary service building for the kitchen. A large classroom nearby is the dining room, as many of the inmates of this institution will require to have meals served to their beds it is expected. Diet kitchens and the usual methods of transporting food in a warm condition to the wards have been provided for by the architect, who was advised in his arrangements by the chief consulting dietitian of the Commission, Miss V. M. Ryley, of Toronto. Vocational training at Kingston is going to be well looked after. The officer in charge of this work, T. B. Kidner, has been in consultation with members of the university staff on the subject and splendid arrangements are possible whereby the wounded soldiers will have the excellent equipment of the University at their disposal. In regard to the more mechanical phases of this training, an excellent bargain has been made with the Department of Militia, which is sending its used-up, played-out motor cars to the hospitals to be worked on by the soldiers studying motor mechanics. At Calgary, a car was rebuilt and is now used to transport the returned soldiers and from their shops. Several men have learned to drive with this car also. The rebuilding of these cars would not be a commercial success, but the cost is justified when returned soldiers are at the same time being taught mechanical arts which will enable them to be more valuable producers of marketable products than they were before. At Mowat Sanatorium, Kingston, where about 175 tubercular returned soldiers of "C" unit will be treated in specially constructed cottages of the best modern design, a separate vocational training building has been erected to provide occupation for the patients. The motor mechanics shop will probably be at this place.

Bean Sowers' Prayer.

Following the example of the 205,000 Boy Scouts of the United States, who have undertaken the growing of beans this year, the boys and girls of the Public Schools of Ontario are getting into line to do the same thing, and they have been given this paraphrase of a sweet old prayer, which they have been asked to use every day: "Now I get me up to work, I pray the Lord I may not shirk; If I should die before the night, I pray the Lord my work's done right."

The Provincial Government will establish a new Agricultural Farm at Liskeard in Northern Ontario.

Good resolutions are formed most easily just before one gets up in the morning after the night before.

DUMMY U-BOATS USED AT ZEEBRUGGE

The Germans Use Many Tricks in Effort to Deceive British Airmen.

London, May 17.—According to despatches from Amsterdam the intense bombardments by British sea-planes of the German submarine base at Zeebrugge, on the Belgian coast, have forced the Germans to use many tricks to escape serious damage. One method of the British airmen have discovered is the construction of dummy submarines of wood, which act as decoys while the real submarines scurry up the canals and hide under bombproof shelters built in the canal banks. The British aviators now carry their raids inland until they the U-boats' refuge. Heretofore when the British machines appeared the German destroyers slunk out of harbor and took up positions just inside the outer mine fields, but during the last raids these destroyers have escaped the airmen only to run into a heavy fire from a British flotilla, which shells them back into harbor. There they come under the fire of the sea-planes.

HAS GAINED TWENTY POUNDS

Life in the Trenches Agrees With Q. M.S. William Hiscox. Mrs. W. N. Hiscox, 32 Ontario street, has received a letter from her husband, Quartermaster Sergt. William Hiscox, fighting "Somewhere in France." Quartermaster Sergeant Hiscox has been in the trenches for twenty months and has never feeling better in his life, having gained twenty pounds. In his letter, the writer states that the boys have been having some hard fighting, but they have been able to make their objective on every occasion. The Hun appears to be more eager to give themselves up than to fight. The writer tells of an incident which occurred. Some German prisoners were being taken. There was one old gray-headed man and one of the sergeants happened to make the remark that he would bet that this fellow was glad to be out of the war.
