

Historical Scenes Throughout Ontario and Quebec

One of the original boundary posts between Canada and the United States, placed in one of Ottawa's parks by the Historical Society of Canada. It bears an inscription as follows: "Lt. Col. I B. B. Estcourt, H.B.M. Commr., Albert Smith, U.S. Commissioner. Treaty of Washington. Boundary. August 9th, 1842."

Wolfe's Monument on the Plains of Abraham, Quebec. This is the fourth monument erected to this great soldier, the first being set up in 1763, and the other in 1832, 1849 and 1912, the last being the one here pictured. The Plains of Abraham are now undergoing a transformation under the supervision of the Dominion Battlefields Commission.

Here is an old monument at Stoney Creek to mark the battlefield of 1812. (Above.)

Another scene from Stoney Creek. This shows a cairn on the battlefield, to mark the last resting place of those slain in the battle of June 30th, 1812. (To the right.)

Tete de Pont Barracks, Kingston, now in active use by the R.C.H.A. They were built originally in 1672 and known then as Fort Frontenac, changed in 1788 to Tete De Pont and reconstructed in 1845 into present condition.

General view of Fort, Toronto, from Exhibition Park. Toronto Island and Bay in the distance. Pergola made of Tombstones erected at Galt by the L.O.D.E. They were taken from a cemetery converted in a public park. (Below.)

A view of the historic home of Laura Secord at Chippewa.

The Government Archives Building at Ottawa, which is the centre of historical lore of the Dominion.