QUEEN'S GENERAL HOSPITAL

MISS HELEN DRUMMOND GIVES AUTHORIZED PICTURE OF IT.

An Interesting Description of the Big Institution and of the Diversity of Human Beings Who Enter It.

Following is a racy account of the situation and life at No. 7 (Queen's) Canadian General Hospital. It was written by Miss Helen Drummond, of the Queen's arts class of 1916 and published with the consent of Colonel Etherington.

A long, straight road, with the dust blowing in our eyes, troops by the thousands tramping by, in the distance, long ridges of sand silhouetted against a blue sky and before us a cluster of low huts of most unpretentious appearance—this is No. 7 General Hospital, the biggest and busiest hospital in France, at least so it seems to us who work there. We are not alone, for on either side are the large imperial hospitals, while a hundred yards or so down the sandy road stands No. 1 Canadian General, which has been here since the first year of the war.

To an outsider, who has but the vaguest idea of active service the group of low huts, with its background of white mounds, conveys but very little idea of what a hospital which has an accommodation of over two thousand, really is, but could they see the inside—the long rows of beds, each with its patient occupant—the clean wooden floors, the centre table piled with dressings and surgical supplies of every sort—then they would understand that outward appearance stands for very little on active service.

Facing the road stand the "acute surgical" huts, communicating with them are the two operating theatres, the X-ray department and the dental department. Behind are row after row of wards, and in the centre are the administration building, the quartermaster's stores and the cookhouse. Behind them again are more wards, while at the extreme back are the great marquees for the walking patients, accommodating eighty each. Each of the thirty-nine wards holds thirty beds, and about a dozen trestles, which are laid down to accommodate the overflow. The convoys nearly always arrive at night, and if you happen to be a hardworking night sister, the very first indication on is generally the arrival of the night sergeant, who orders so many trestles down, according to the number of wounded who are being brought down the line. Shortly afterwards the hospital train pulls in, and is met by the ambulances, all driven by girls, and in a short time you can hear the tramp of the stretcher bearers from the admitting hut, as they carry their burdens to the wards. Soon the doors open, the lights switch on, and the first stretcher is carried in. As quickly as possible the patient is lifted into bed, bathed, his wounds attended to, and unless in severe pain, he generally goes to sleep for very weariness—many of them not having slept for nights before being admitted to hospital. If the night is a busy one, sometimes we have both convoys and evacuations, and it is wonderful with what good management and dispatch these are carried on. The list of names with their respective wards being given to the sisters, the patients are then dressed in the "blightly" clothes by the orderlies, and are carried on stretchers to the admitting hut, where the names are checked over by the sergeant-major to ensure absolute correctness. Outside the hut the ambulances are carefully lifted, and from thence to the hospital train, which carries them to the coast, and at last home across the Channel, the Mecca of every Tommy.

FAMOUS 21ST BATTALION

A CALL IS BEING ISSUED TO REINFORCE THIS BODY.

Which Has Won so Much Distinction and Glory on the Battlefields of Flanders—There is Keen Interest in Kingston Over the Gallant 21st.

No battalion from this district has won more distinction and glory than the famous 21st, organized and trained in Kingston under such a capable officer as Lt.-Col. (now General) W. St. Pierre Hughes.

Brig.-Gen. Hughes was in command of the 14th regiment when the war broke out and he quickly rallied hundreds of the most experienced soldiers in the various active militia units of this division. The evening of their departure, in the spring of 1915, will ever be a memorable one in the history of this old city.

In the trenches, on the battlefield of Flanders, they have covered themselves with glory, and their career has been followed with keen interest by the citizens of Kingston. Many of them have paid the supreme sacrifice and many may be seen walking our streets daily, wearing the familiar bar.

In France to-day this battalion is still under the command of a Kingstonian, Major Harry E. Pense, who writes that at Vimy Ridge and in the recent great offensive they have been in the thick of it. It is to help the men of this battalion that the call is now being issued. Let it not be in vain.

THE Y.M.C.A. CAMP.

Arrangements Being Made for Outing on Grenadier Island.

C. R. Powers, who is to act as camp director at the annual Y. M. C. A. outing to be held at Grenadier Island this summer, has already received fifteen applications from boys and young men who want to spend several weeks beside the mighty St. Lawrence. Mr. Powers expects to leave about Saturday to open the camp prior to the coming of the boys on Tuesday next. It is expected that there will be about twenty at the camp, and arrangements may be made to have junior teams from Alexandria Bay and Thousand Island Park come to the camp to play baseball.

At Lake Ontario.

At Lake Ontario Park last evening the vaudeville held the interest of the audience. Bert Lamont showed versatility by introducing wire walking and unsupported ladder balancing in a neat showmanship way. The act is original, with many novelties. Bert Crowley, the female impersonator, won applause by his changes and his rendition of different numbers, especially his Spanish song, "Esponona" and "The Sunshine of Your Smile."

The Pathe Gazette, with the war pictures, was good. The same bill to-night. To-morrow there will be an entire change of programme.

Mrs. Ronald Lewis, organist at John Street Presbyterian Church, Belleville, for some time, was presented at choir practice with a piece of silver. She is retiring.

Record of 23,000 Patients.

Since its arrival at Etaples in November, No. 7 has a record of 23,600 patients, 3,137 operations, 3,708 X-rays. These sound like bold facts to the casual reader, but could they picture the actual scene—the operating theatres and X-ray, running day and night if needs be—the rows of stretchers lined up outside, the steady tramp of the bearers as they carry the patients to and from the wards, the care and attention given by the sisters, medical officers and orderlies to every man—they would then realize that behind the bare recital of statistics lies a world of its own, where medical science battles day and night to mend the broken bodies of the men who have given their lives for England.

Side by side, in the long ward they lie, the patient British Tommy, the lean, long Australian, the merry Canadian—all good friends, all indulging in wordy discussions as to how they would have arranged the last "push," all eager to get over to Blightly, and one and all with a pleasant smile as you pass down the ward. It is amusing to hear the disputes between the Tommies and the Canadians as to the merits of their respective countries, but what is even funnier, are the heated arguments between perhaps a long, lanky Black Watch Highlander, brought up as an orthodox Presbyterian, and a little Tommy from the Midlands, who has had the tenets of the Prayer Book drilled into him by the village curate: "A dinna hold wi' you Episcopalians," remarked a lantern-jawed Scot one day.

"How's that, Jack?" enquired the C. of E. adherent with interest.

"Because ther's too much kneelin' in a body in a kilt has his knees to consider," answered Jack with some asperity.

They are very particular, too, about their rank. "Good morning, Jones"—this a very small person, swathed in bandages. "My, but you're such a little chap." "Am no so wee, when a've me cap on," returned a slightly indignant voice from beneath a layer of cotton wool. "Am a corporal, too." Hasty apologies then ensue, which are graciously received, and the voice adds politely, "Aweel, 'twas no your fault, sister, but when a body's that stumpy, he has to be

HAD INDIGESTION Could Keep Nothing on Stomach

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitated feeling in it.

After a meal you feel that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, burning sensation; that souring and rising of the food which is so unpleasant and in many cases very painful.

It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion when Burdock Blood Bitters may be so easily obtained. This old and well-known remedy, which is a combination of nature's best roots, herbs, barks and berries, will cure indigestion and all stomach troubles.

Mr. Lazare Savoy, Pokemouche, N.B., writes: "About two years ago I was troubled with indigestion that bad I could keep nothing on my stomach. I was sorely disappointed in everything I tried to relieve me. At last a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I took four bottles and can now eat anything that is set in front of me."

That grand old medicine, B.B.B. has been on the market for the past forty years, and we claim, without any fear of contradiction, that it is the best cure for all stomach troubles.
