

Canada, England, United States, Belgium and Spain Feel the War's Influence

The British Recruiting Mission in New York City, where recruits for the British Army are received in accordance with permission granted by the U.S. Congress.

These are doubly anxious days for Spain. King Alfonso in conference with the Prime Minister, Senor Eduardo Dato.

United States marines passing the reviewing stand in Union Square, New York, in the recruiting parade, when all branches of the service marched so that prospective volunteers might see and select the branch they preferred.

English girls, engaged in the forest of the Marquis of Hertford's Warwickshire estate, cutting and stacking trench prop poles for the French front. The girls are called by the men working with them "Woodpeckers."

Canadian staff officers inspecting some of the booty taken by the Canadians in the famous fight for Vimy Ridge, while French village children, too young to realise the full significance of war, play alongside the death-dealing weapons.

Six courageous young women of Los Angeles, Cal., who have taken up aviation so that they may serve the Government as air scouts in the Coast Patrol. (Upper photo.) Belgian War Mission, headed by Baron Moncheur, at Washington. (Above.)