THE CONFESSIONS OF ROXANE

(By Frances Walter)

WE ARE "WRITTEN UP."

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

"You silly thing!" I chided as Mariam and I left the taxicab several blocks from the Gordon residence. "Did you want that chauffeur to know where we were going? Suppose the injury to Mr. Kenwood is more serious than you suspect, will not the police make an exhaustive search for us, and is it not possible that this chauffeur might tell them that he brought two very frightened and very disheveled young women home at an unseemly hour the night of the murder?"

"I feel," cried Mariam, "Roxane, you are a wonder! You should have been a detective."

"No, I shouldn't," I replied, "I have tried my hand at that science and I must confess that I have failed to qualify."

We confronted a very astonished maid when we rang the bell at Mariam's home.

"Oh, Miss Mariam!" exclaimed the girl. "What has happened?"

"Nothing more serious than an automobile wreck," I fibbed glibly. "Our car was smashed to pieces a short distance from here, and we did not think it necessary to wait for another."

"And we are very tired and soiled, Mary," Mariam concluded. "Plenty of hot water in our bath tubs please. We will go directly to our rooms and to bed."

Mary, whose attachment to Mariam was the one love affair of her life, flew to make us comfortable, bringing first a glass of wine.

"You are quite sure you are not hurt, Miss Mariam?" she asked over and over again.

"Quite," was Mariam's reply each time. "However, we were very roughly shaken and I fear we shall be very tired and stiff in the morning. We shall want to sleep late."

"I am sure you will," Mary agreed. And we did. Indeed it was after the noon hour when I awoke to find Mariam sitting on the edge of my bed.

"What is the matter?" I asked, rising with a start.

"Roxane, look at this!" As she spoke Mariam held up the front page of a newspaper.

"Oh, it is horrible!" I stared at the double-column headlines and felt an insidious weakness creep over me. "Our names, too?"

"No they haven't learned our names—yet." I seized the newspaper and read the bold type:

"Mysterious Shooting in Cafe—Writer Wounded by Jealous Lover"

"Phantom Women's Escape."

"Who Are the 'Phantom Women?'"

"We Two."

I breathed a sigh of relief. "And we escaped? There is certainly some consolation in that, despite the blackness of the headlines."

As I read on I learned that an admirer of the young woman to whom Mr. Kenwood had spoken in the restaurant was his assailant. Several shots had been fired and several bullets had penetrated Mr. Kenwood's skin, but the hospital authorities seemed to agree that there was no danger of Mr. Kenwood departing this life in the near future.

"The curious part of the whole thing is that we are given more attention than Mr. Kenwood," Mariam commented. "The fact that he was shot is dismissed with a few words. Then they devote a column and a half to describing us two 'phantom women.'"

It was true. Paragraph after paragraph was written about us. We were called beautiful, stylishly dressed, apparently society girls, and what not. Finally the article disclosed that Mr. Kenwood either knew very little about us or he was attempting to keep our names secret, for he had refused to tell who we were.

"How gallant of Mr. Kenwood!" exclaimed Mariam.

Mid-Season Modes True to the Straight Line.

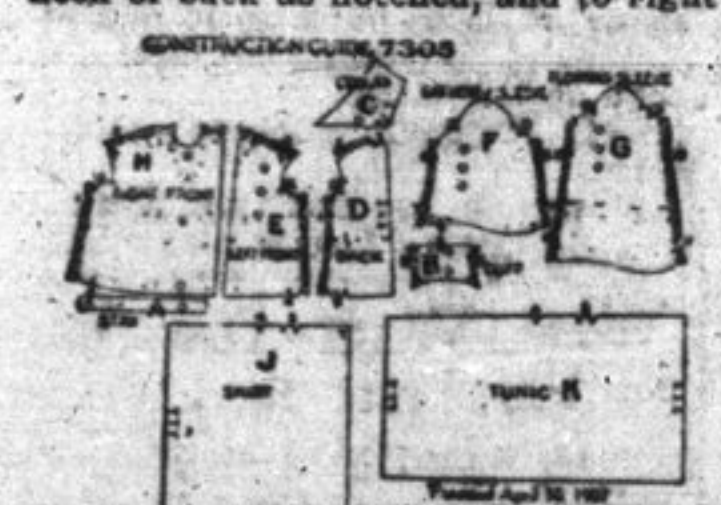

A long-sleeved dress of apple green organdy, designed for youthful figures. The tunic has a straight lower edge, but may be of lace or embroidery if preferred.

The styles for mid-summer have registered their loyalty to the straight-line. Here it is exploited to excellent effect in a frock of apple-green organdy. The blouse is in long-sleeved effect, the one-piece skirt being attached to it. The tunic has a straight lower edge and may be in self-material, lace or embroidery finishing. Medium size requires 8 yards 3/4-inch material.

A plait must be formed in the front, consisting of slot perforations, to properly begin the construction of the frock. Then lap to small "o" perforations and press. Turn the lower edge under on small "o" perforations and stitch invisibly to post.

tion, or if desired, attach 1 inch from folded edge. Gather shoulder edges of fronts between "T" perforations. Close under-arm and shoulder seam; as notched. Gather along crossline of small "o" perforations. Large "O" perforations in right front indicate center-front. Adjust stay under gathers with center-fronts, center-backs and front edges even (large "O" perforation indicates center-front); bring small "o" perforation in stay to under-arm seam; if desired tape may be used. Lap right front on left to line.

Take the collar next and sew to neck of back as notched, and to right front matching large "O" perforations; leave collar free forward of large "O" perforation on right side, and forward of shoulder seam on left side; bind the neck edge.

Then, close the back seam of the skirt and gather the upper edge between "T" perforations, also the entire upper edge of the tunic. Arrange tunic on skirt with notches, center-fronts and center-backs even. Sew skirt and tunic to lower edge of waist with notches, center-fronts and center-backs even.

Now, take the sleeve and close seams with cuff seam, as notched. Gather lower edge of sleeve between "T" perforations. Face cuff and sew to sleeve, notches even; bring small "o" perforation in cuff to seam of sleeve, and bring seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in simple as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam easing in any fullness. Finish the ends of the waist with buttons or embroidery. It may be made of ribbon or of self-material.

Fill Every Jar

Save every berry. Hunt out the empty jars and help preserve Canada's abundant fruit crop.

Strawberries—luscious, dark red, Canadian—are on our markets now. Serve them while they last. Heaped high with Dominion Crystal Powdered Sugar, there is no fruit of quite the same fresh richness of flavor.

And preserve this first of Canada's fruits with the only sugar which may rightly be called "Canadian from the ground up"—Dominion Crystal Sugar—pure, sparkling, finely granulated. We do import the finest of raw cane sugar and refine it, but our pride is in the product we make from Canadian sugar beets—its use is dictated by good judgment as well as patriotism.

The Sunshine Way for Strawberries

After weighing out carefully equal quantities of strawberries and Dominion Crystal Sugar, fill preserving kettle with alternate layers of berries and sugar. Boil slowly for ten minutes, skimming frequently. Place on plates or platters, covered with net or piece of glass, and set in sun for three or four days. When syrup becomes thick and fruit plump, pack cold in jars and seal.
