

INCIDENTS OF THE GREAT WAR GRAPHICALLY PORTRAYED

American troops swinging down Piccadilly on their march through London on August 14th.

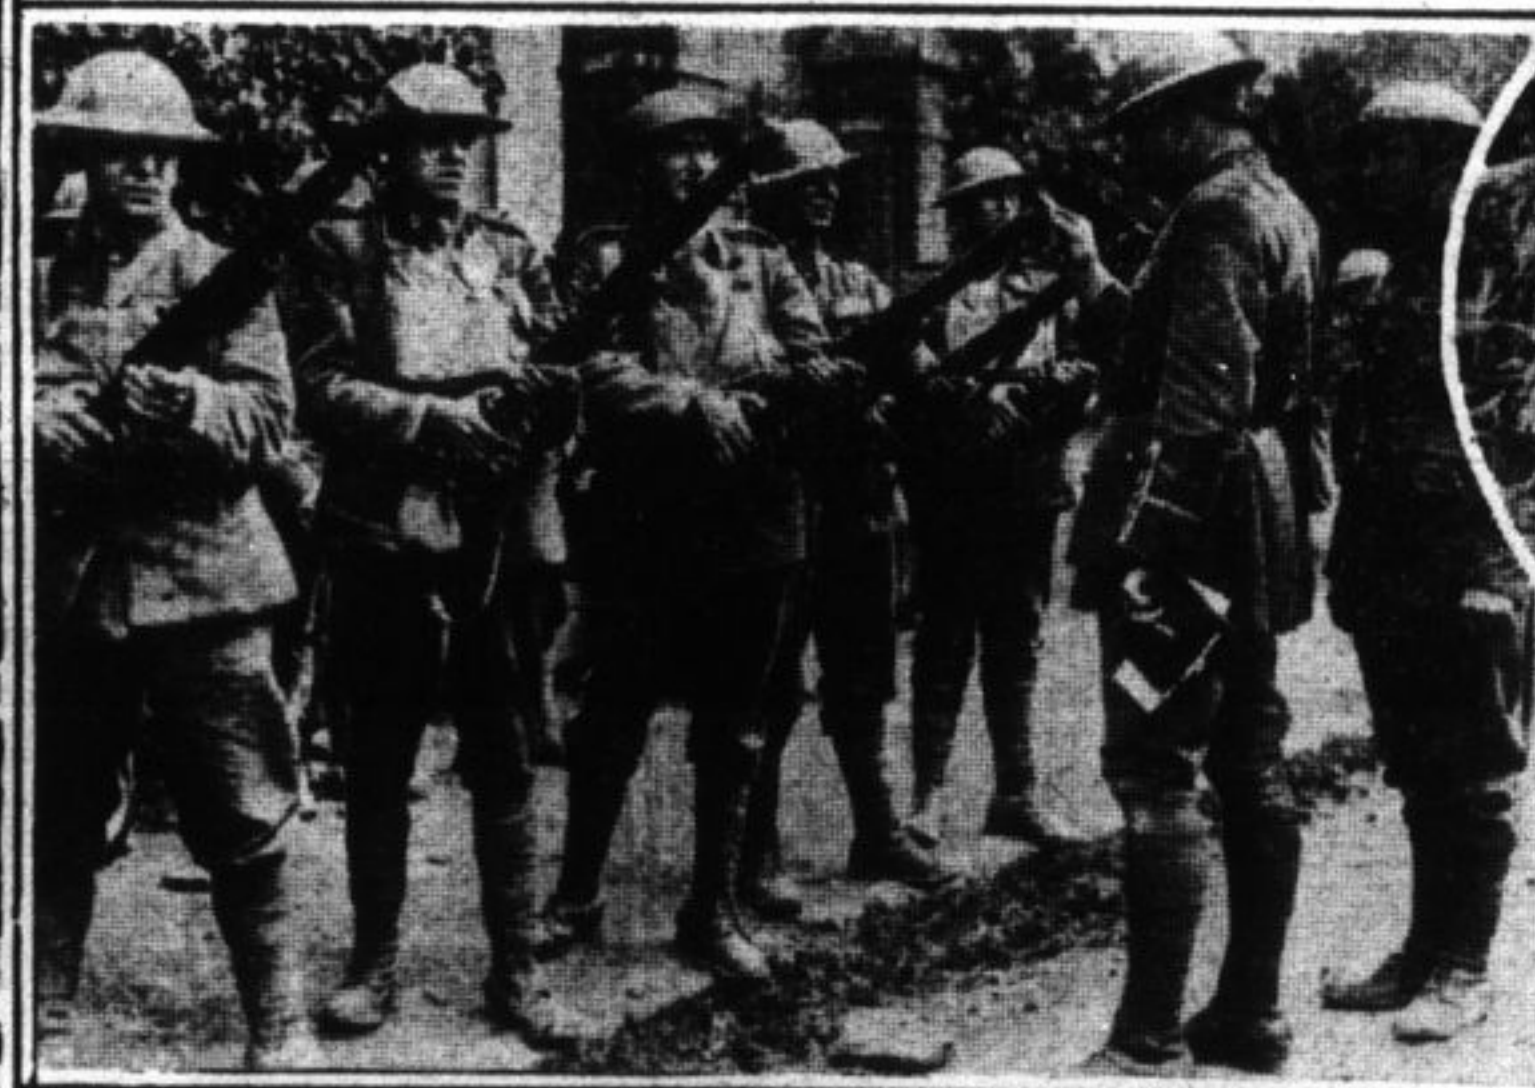

A U.S. soldier stationed almost astride a giant disappearing gun, in which position he remains while the gun is fired.

Above—German sailors from the former commerce raider Krinprinz
The War Demonstration Hospital in the grounds of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research at Avenue A and 64th St., New York City.

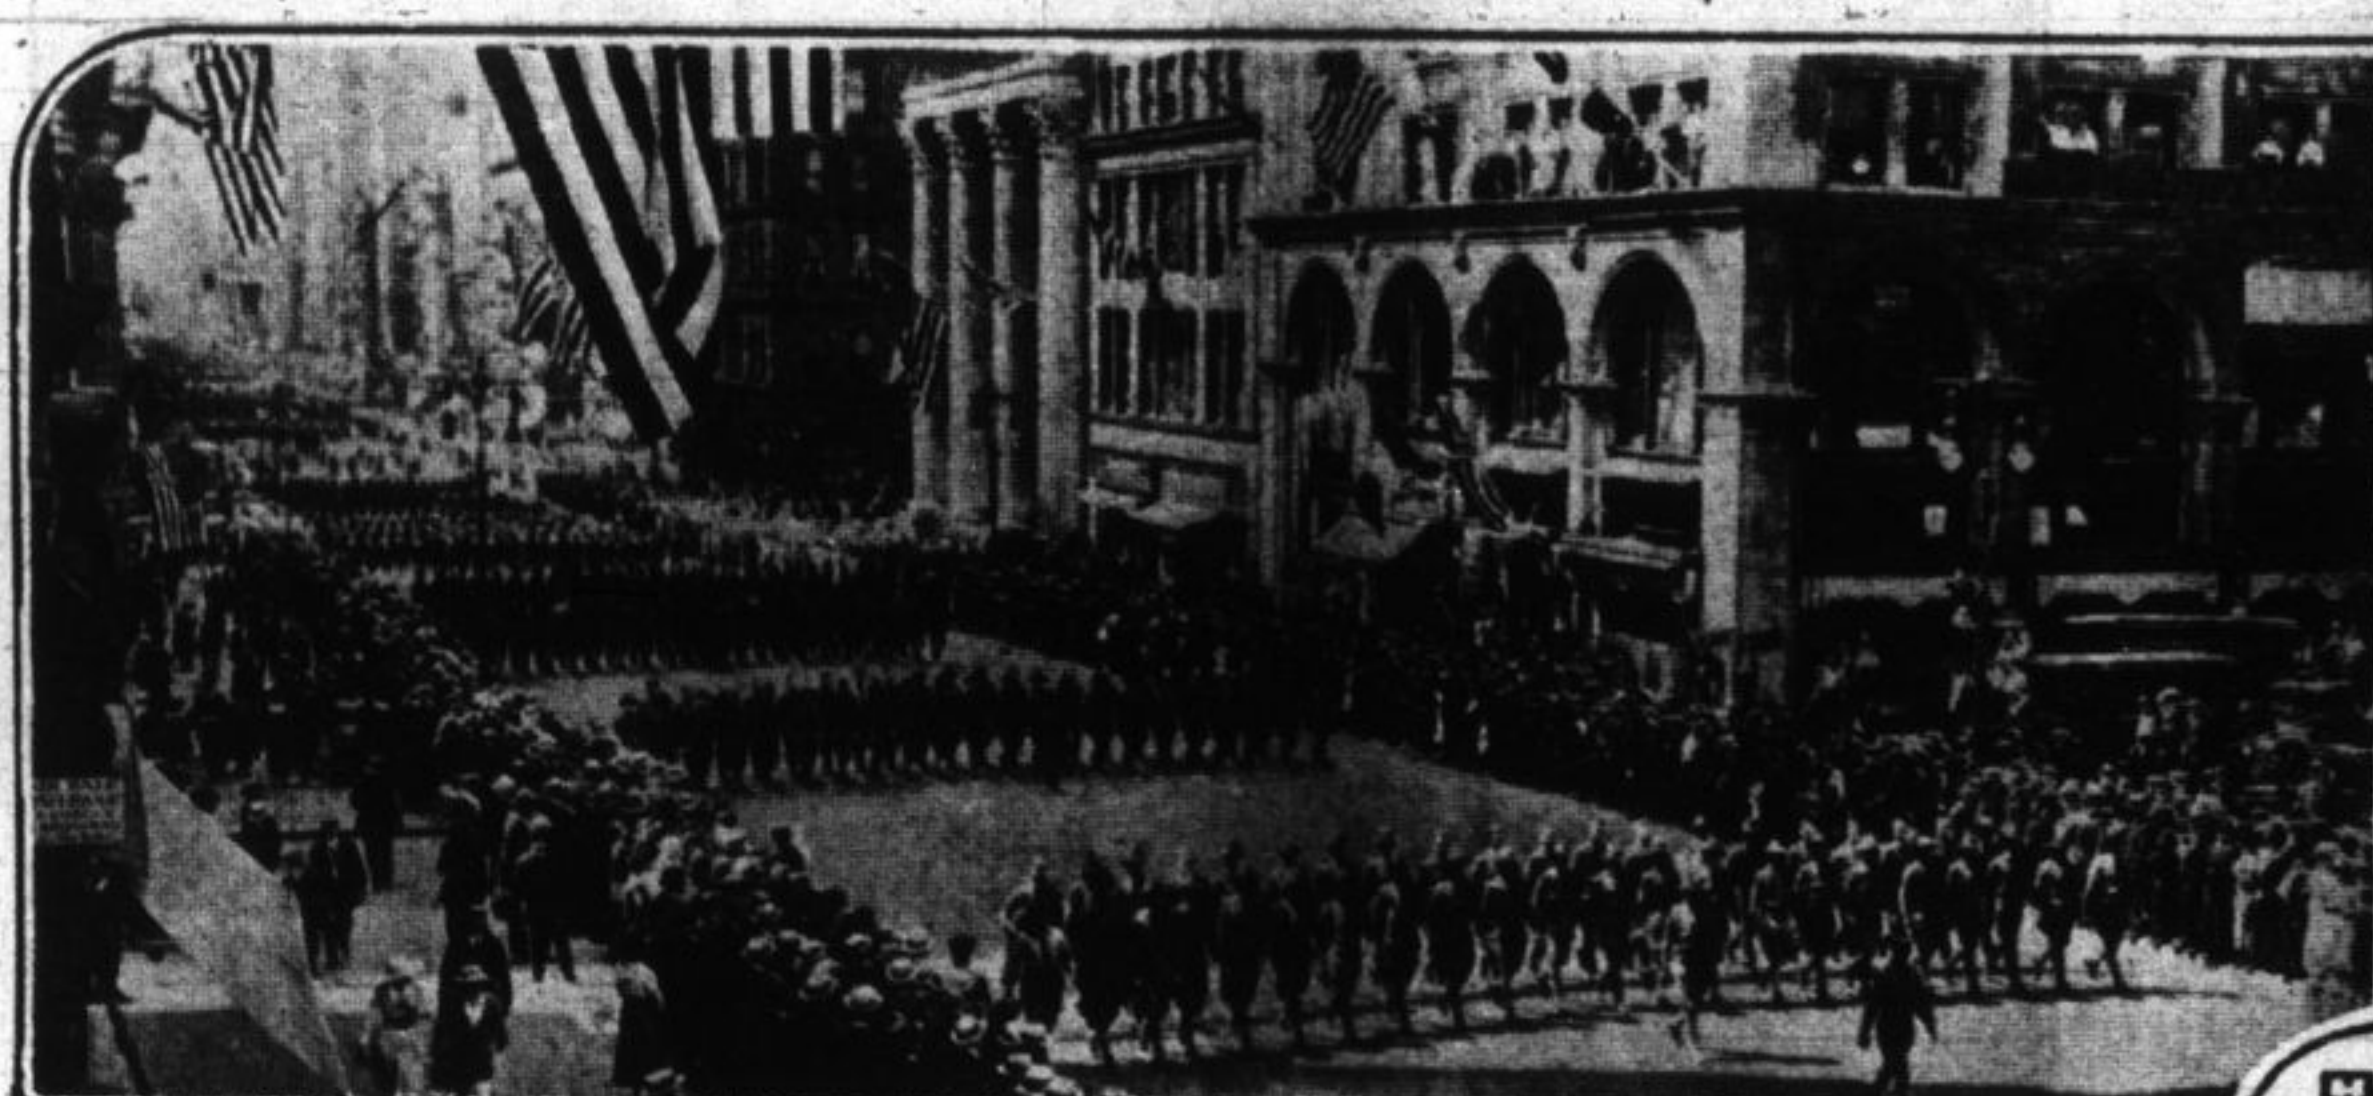

General Petain visiting the City of Thann in the reconquered portion of Alsace.

A Canadian officer inspecting the rifles of his men in a recently captured village in France. In the wear and tear of fighting a rifle is apt to become useless in a very short time and even dangerous to the man using it. Frequent inspection is, therefore, necessary. As soon as a rifle seems no longer serviceable, it is replaced by a new one and sent to be repaired.

Young Bavarian soldier taken prisoner by the Canadians in recent fighting. The heavy boots worn by the German troops are not easy to take off and so the prisoners are helping one another to get the relief which their captivity now enables them to enjoy. They represent only a small part of the large haul of prisoners made by the Canadians in the fighting since Vimy Ridge.

"Boyce's Tigers" leading the drafted men of the new National Army, representing the Boroughs of Manhattan, Richmond, and Queens, swinging up Fifth Avenue in the great parade recently in New York.

Canadians at home in a concrete fortification made by the Germans in a French village.

The first photograph taken outdoors of President Wilson and his Cabinet.