For real travel sensation, beating Dickens' stage coaches all hollow, this six-horse mail coach leaving White Horse for Dawson, holds the record.

The steamer which goes up and down the Yukon from White Horse to Dawson.

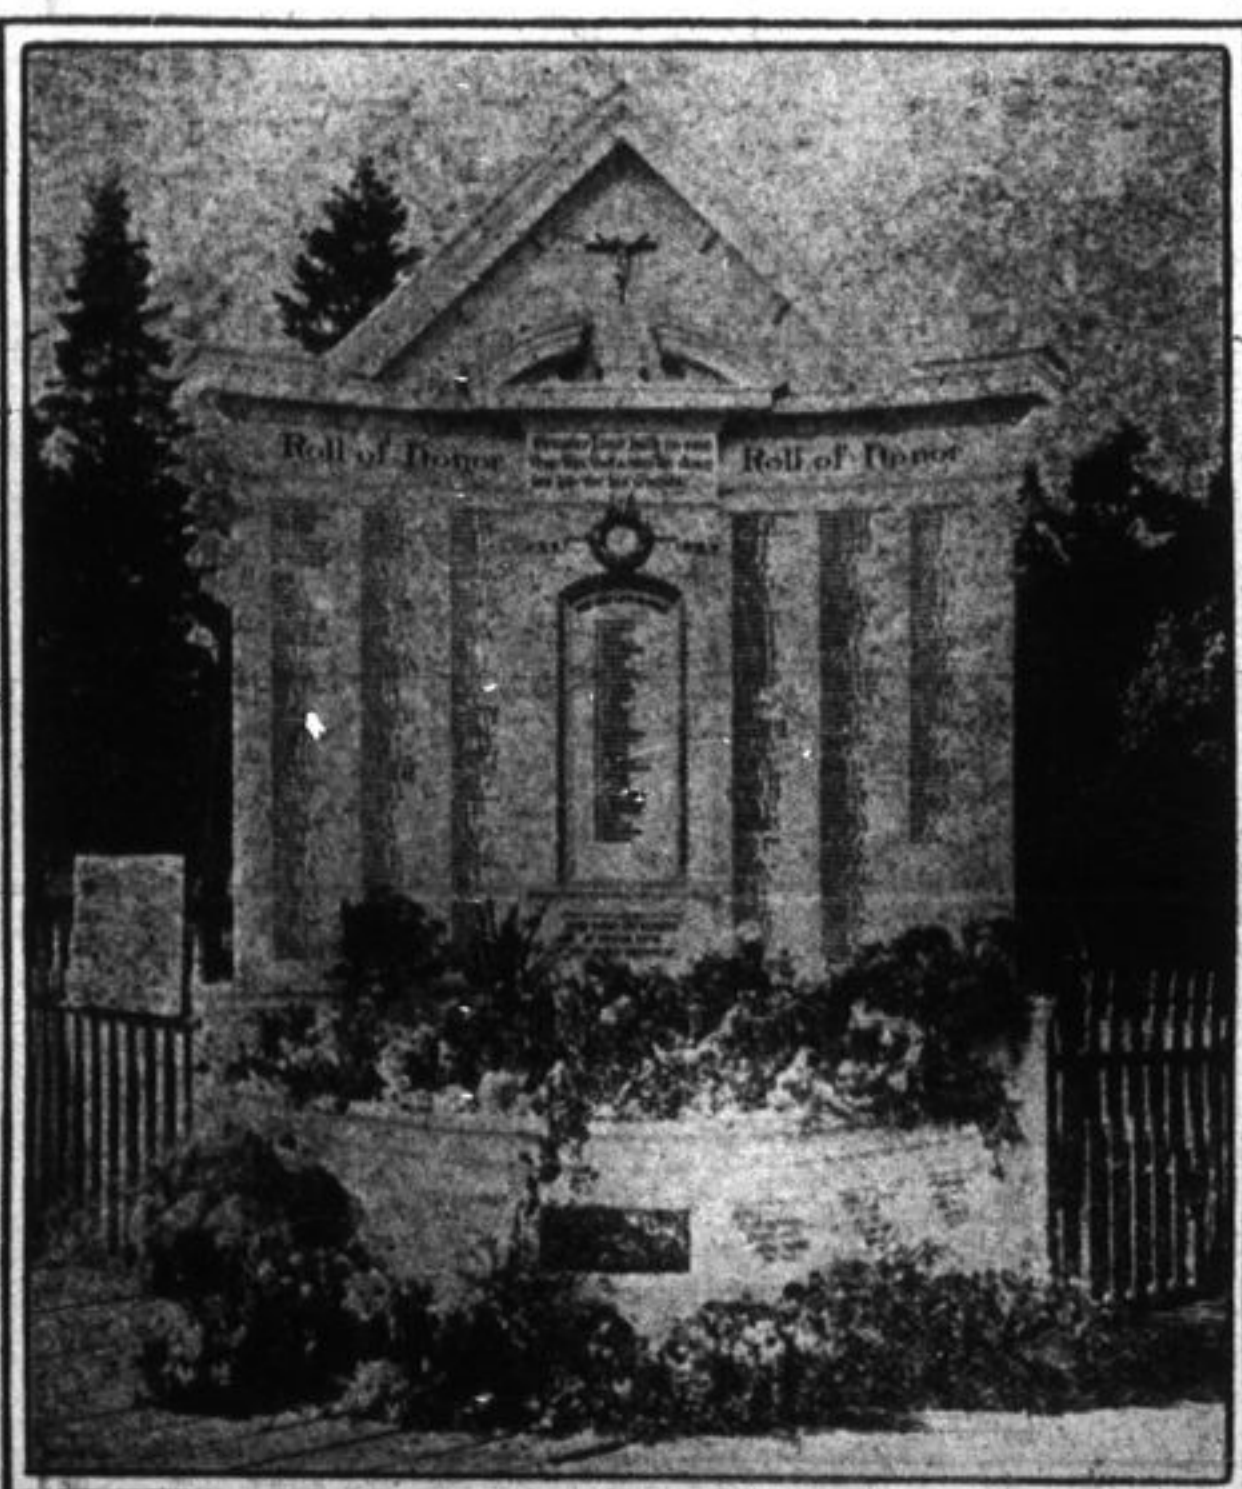

This caterpillar tractor hauling freight on the dock of Lake Atlin, B.C., was a veteran in that line of transportation long before the advent of the now famous "tank."

In this unusual photograph the camera and the midnight sun of Alaska, some time in the last week in June, give us a picture of a rotary plough driving among the huge snow-drifts.

Once more university girls (Toronto) out in the school of nature down on the fruit farms of Grimsby, Ont. One "scuffles," the other hoes. All's right with the world.

PICTURES OF WAR AND PEACE

Esquimalt, B.C., has the first war shrine erected in any overseas dominion. This famous war-post shrine contains the names of British Columbia's dead who died that a nation might live. It was unveiled a few days ago by Brigadier General Leekie, D.S.O.

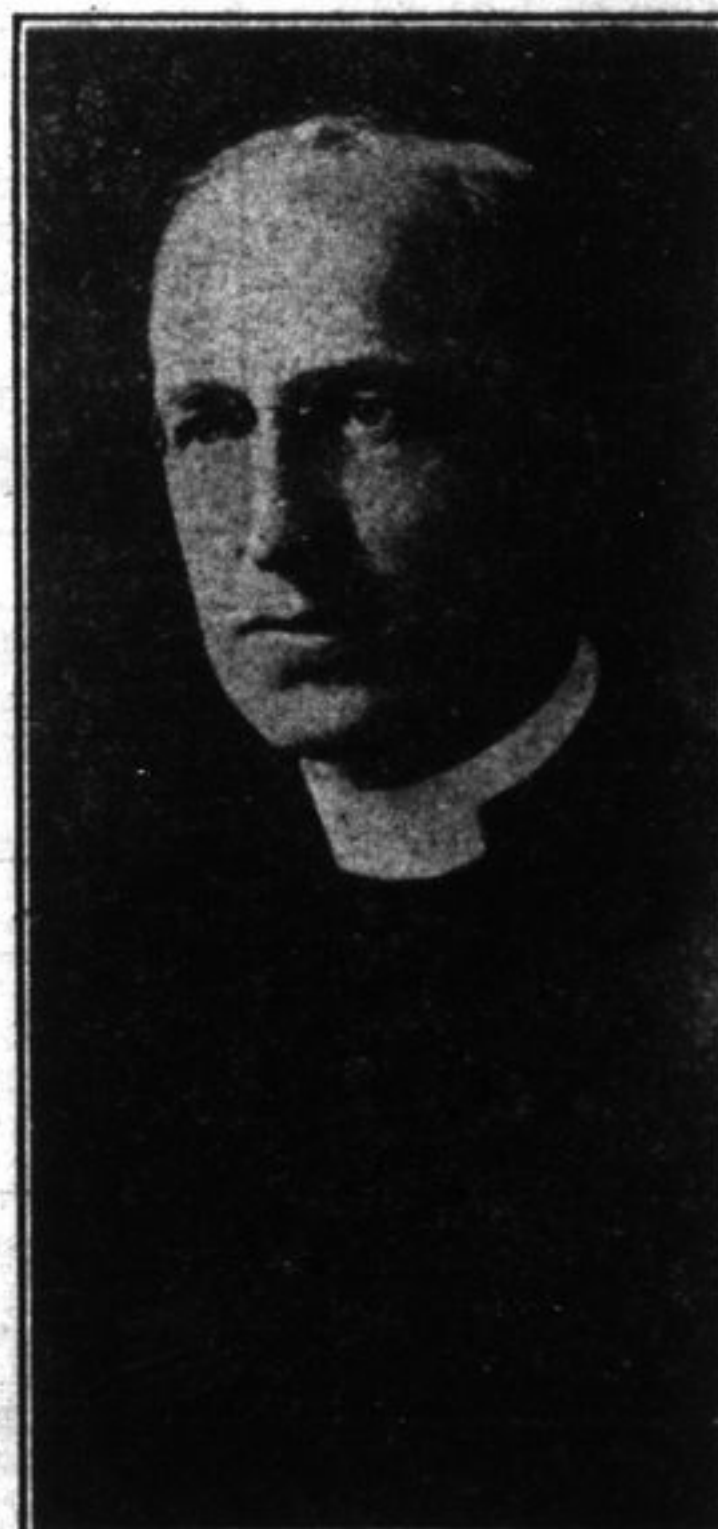

Canadian National Exhibition's prize baby, seven months old.

Physical instructors forming the model camp at the Canadian National Exhibition. This fine-looking group of men won the admiration of the vast Exhibition crowds, and their daily exhibitions were eagerly and enthusiastically followed by all who witnessed them.

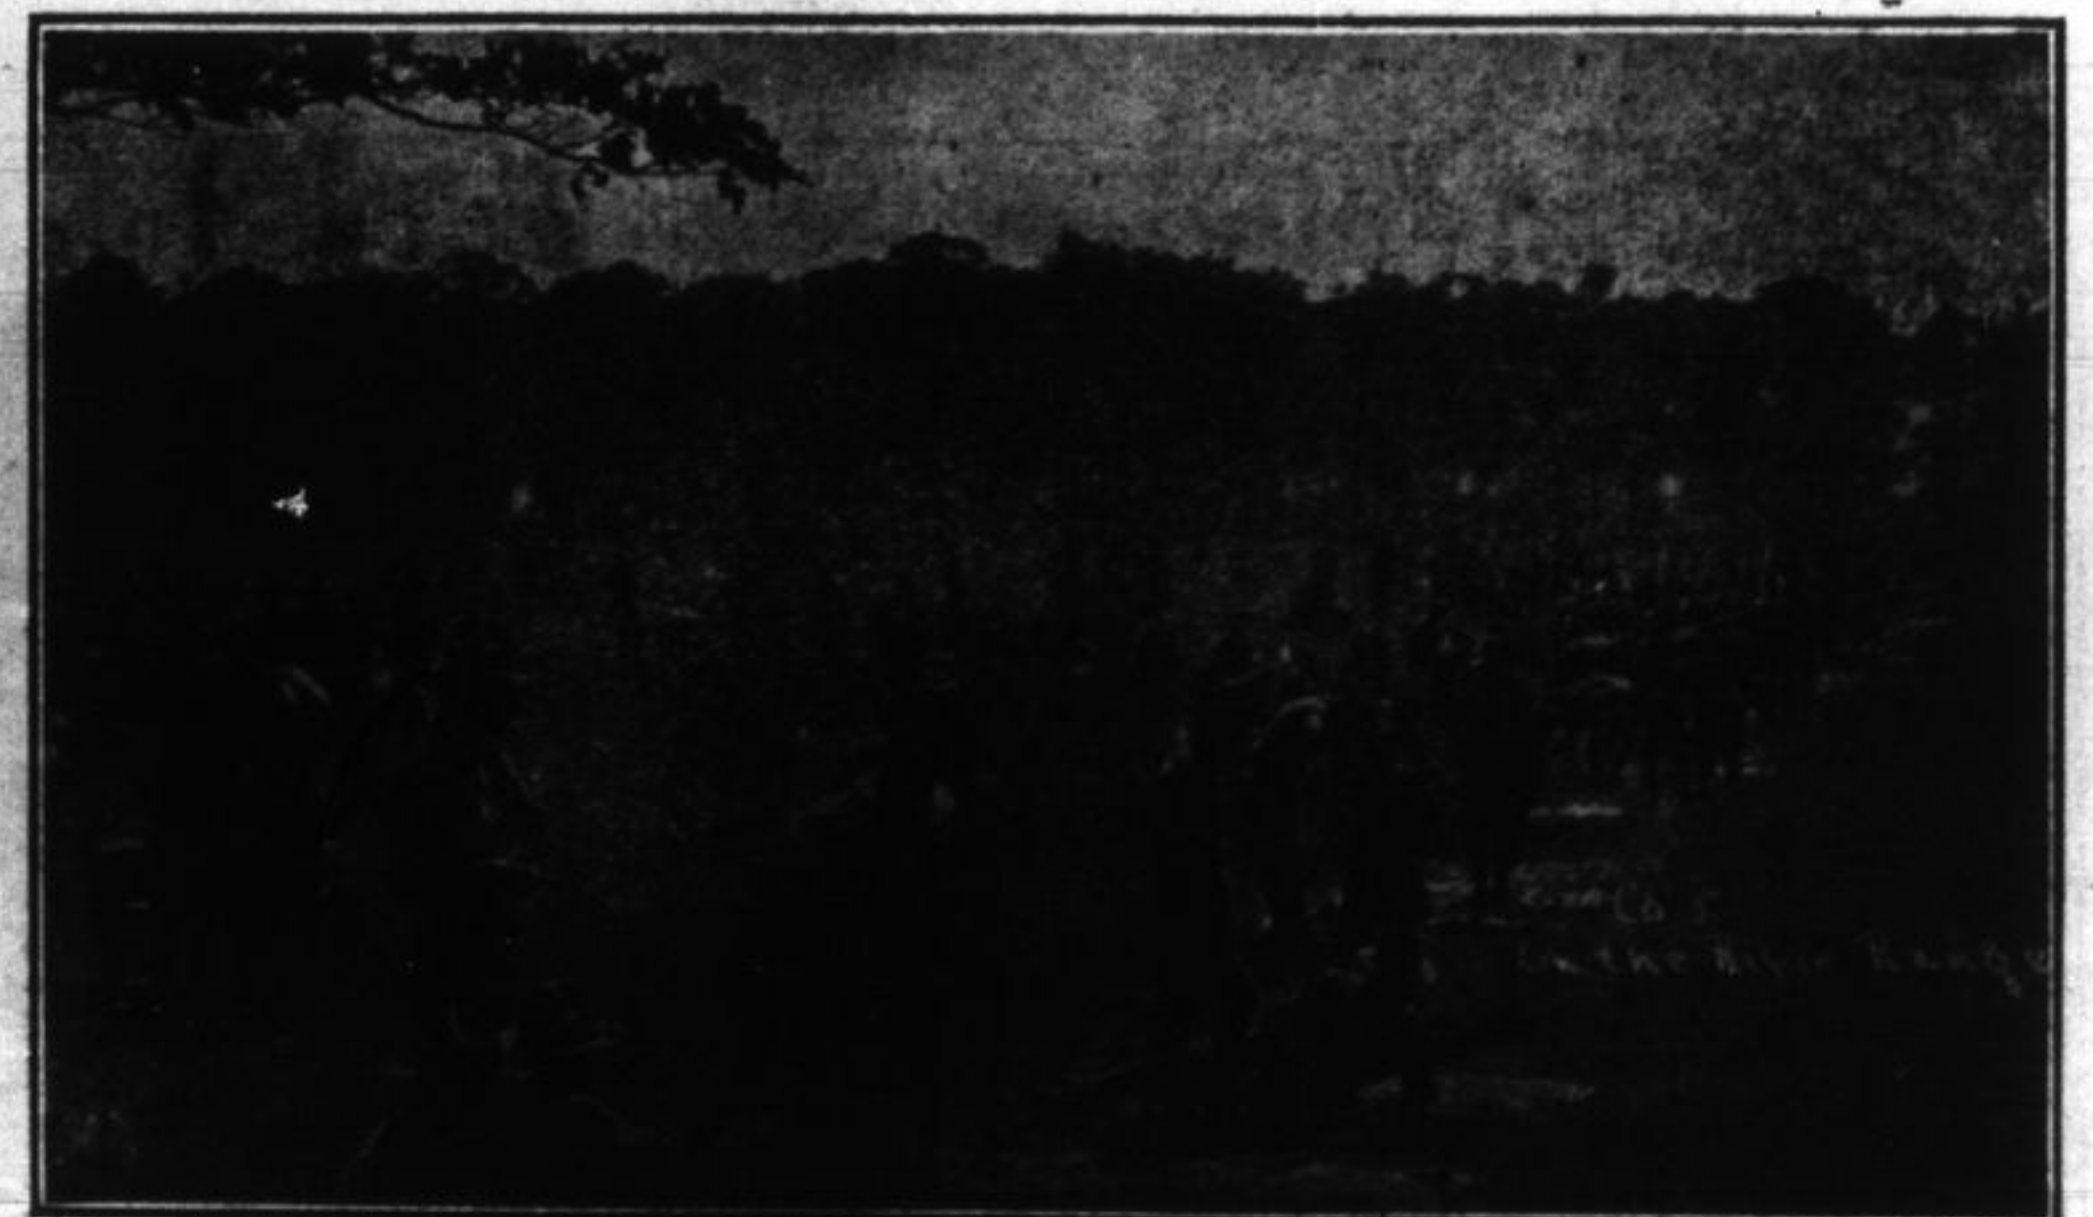

War prisoners escape from Germany. Pte. Dusenberg, of Brighton, Ont.; Pte. Weatherhead, Philadelphia, (Royal Scots); and Pte. W. Henderson, C.M.R., from Toronto.

Among clerical gentlemen who roll up their sleeves and go in for winning the war, count Rev. Principal Vance, of Vancouver, as one of the first rank. Not long ago there was a monster win-the-war meeting in Vancouver. That it was possible to get 5,000 people in that city to give a roar for every Canadian putting his shoulder to the wheel is very largely due to Principal Vance, who is now President of the Win-the-War League of British Columbia.

Here we have ex-King Constantine of Greece an exile. He is shown, with his wife, leaving the Palace Hotel at Lugano, Switzerland, in an automobile. He was on his way to the railroad station to take a train to Engadine, the famous summer and winter resort in the Grisons. It is reputed that Constantine has bought the magnificent chateau Chartreuse in Switzerland.

United States soldiers in training at Fort Niagara, New York. They are here shown at rifle practice.
