

- The War Reviewed in Striking Photos - Women play Prominent Part -

These women run a big farm in England. When the only laborers obtainable are a few veterans and discharged soldiers, women workers see that the harvest is not wasted.

English women serving. University and professional women help in fruit-picking.

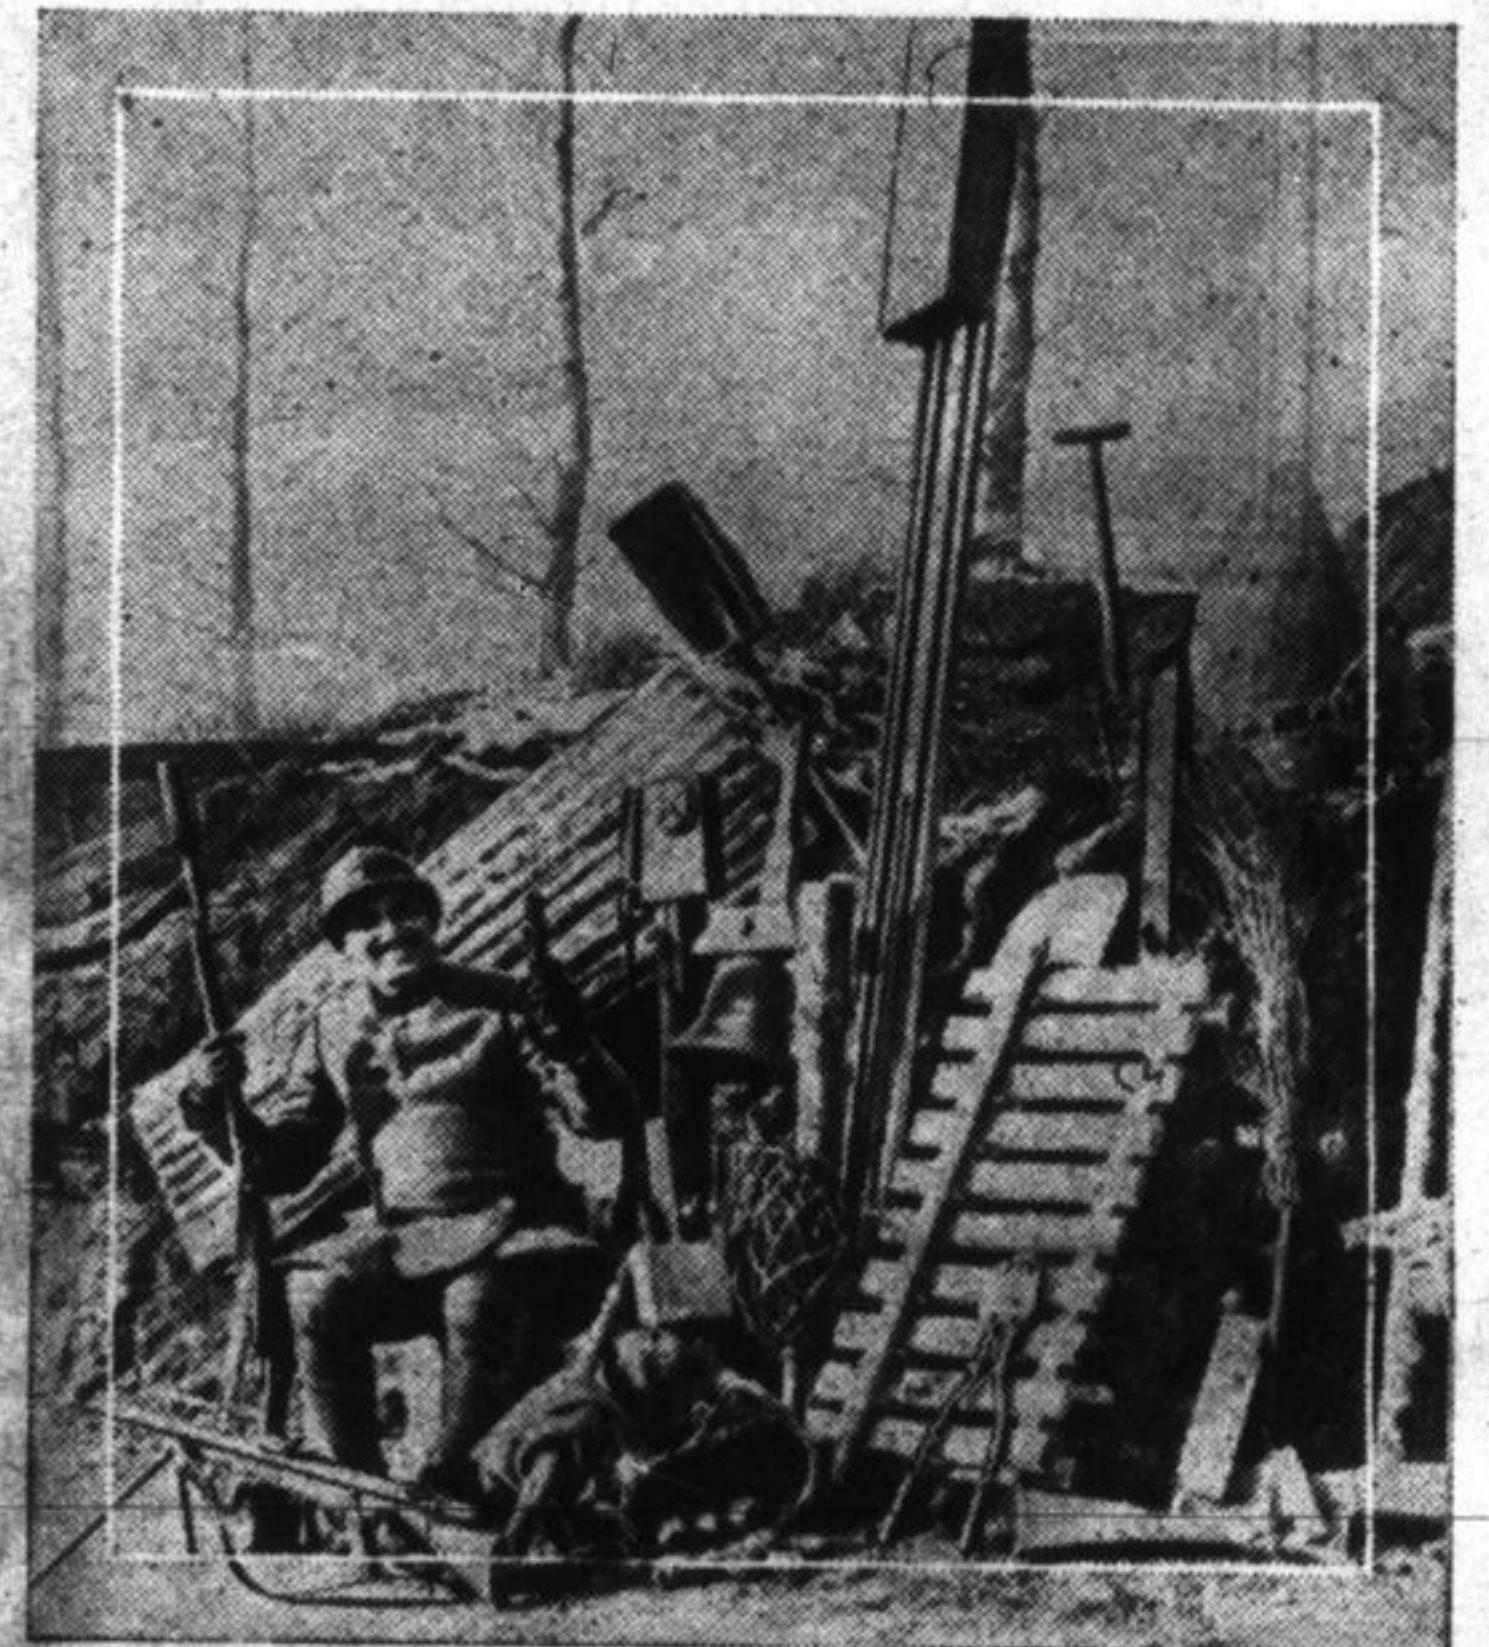

At the battle of Menin Road. Gallant British stretcher-bearers going forward over broken ground.

A V.A.D. at work. Binding up a soldier's wound in France.

The retreat of the Germans before the advancing Allied forces has given the cavalry its opportunity. Here they are seen passing through a ruined village.

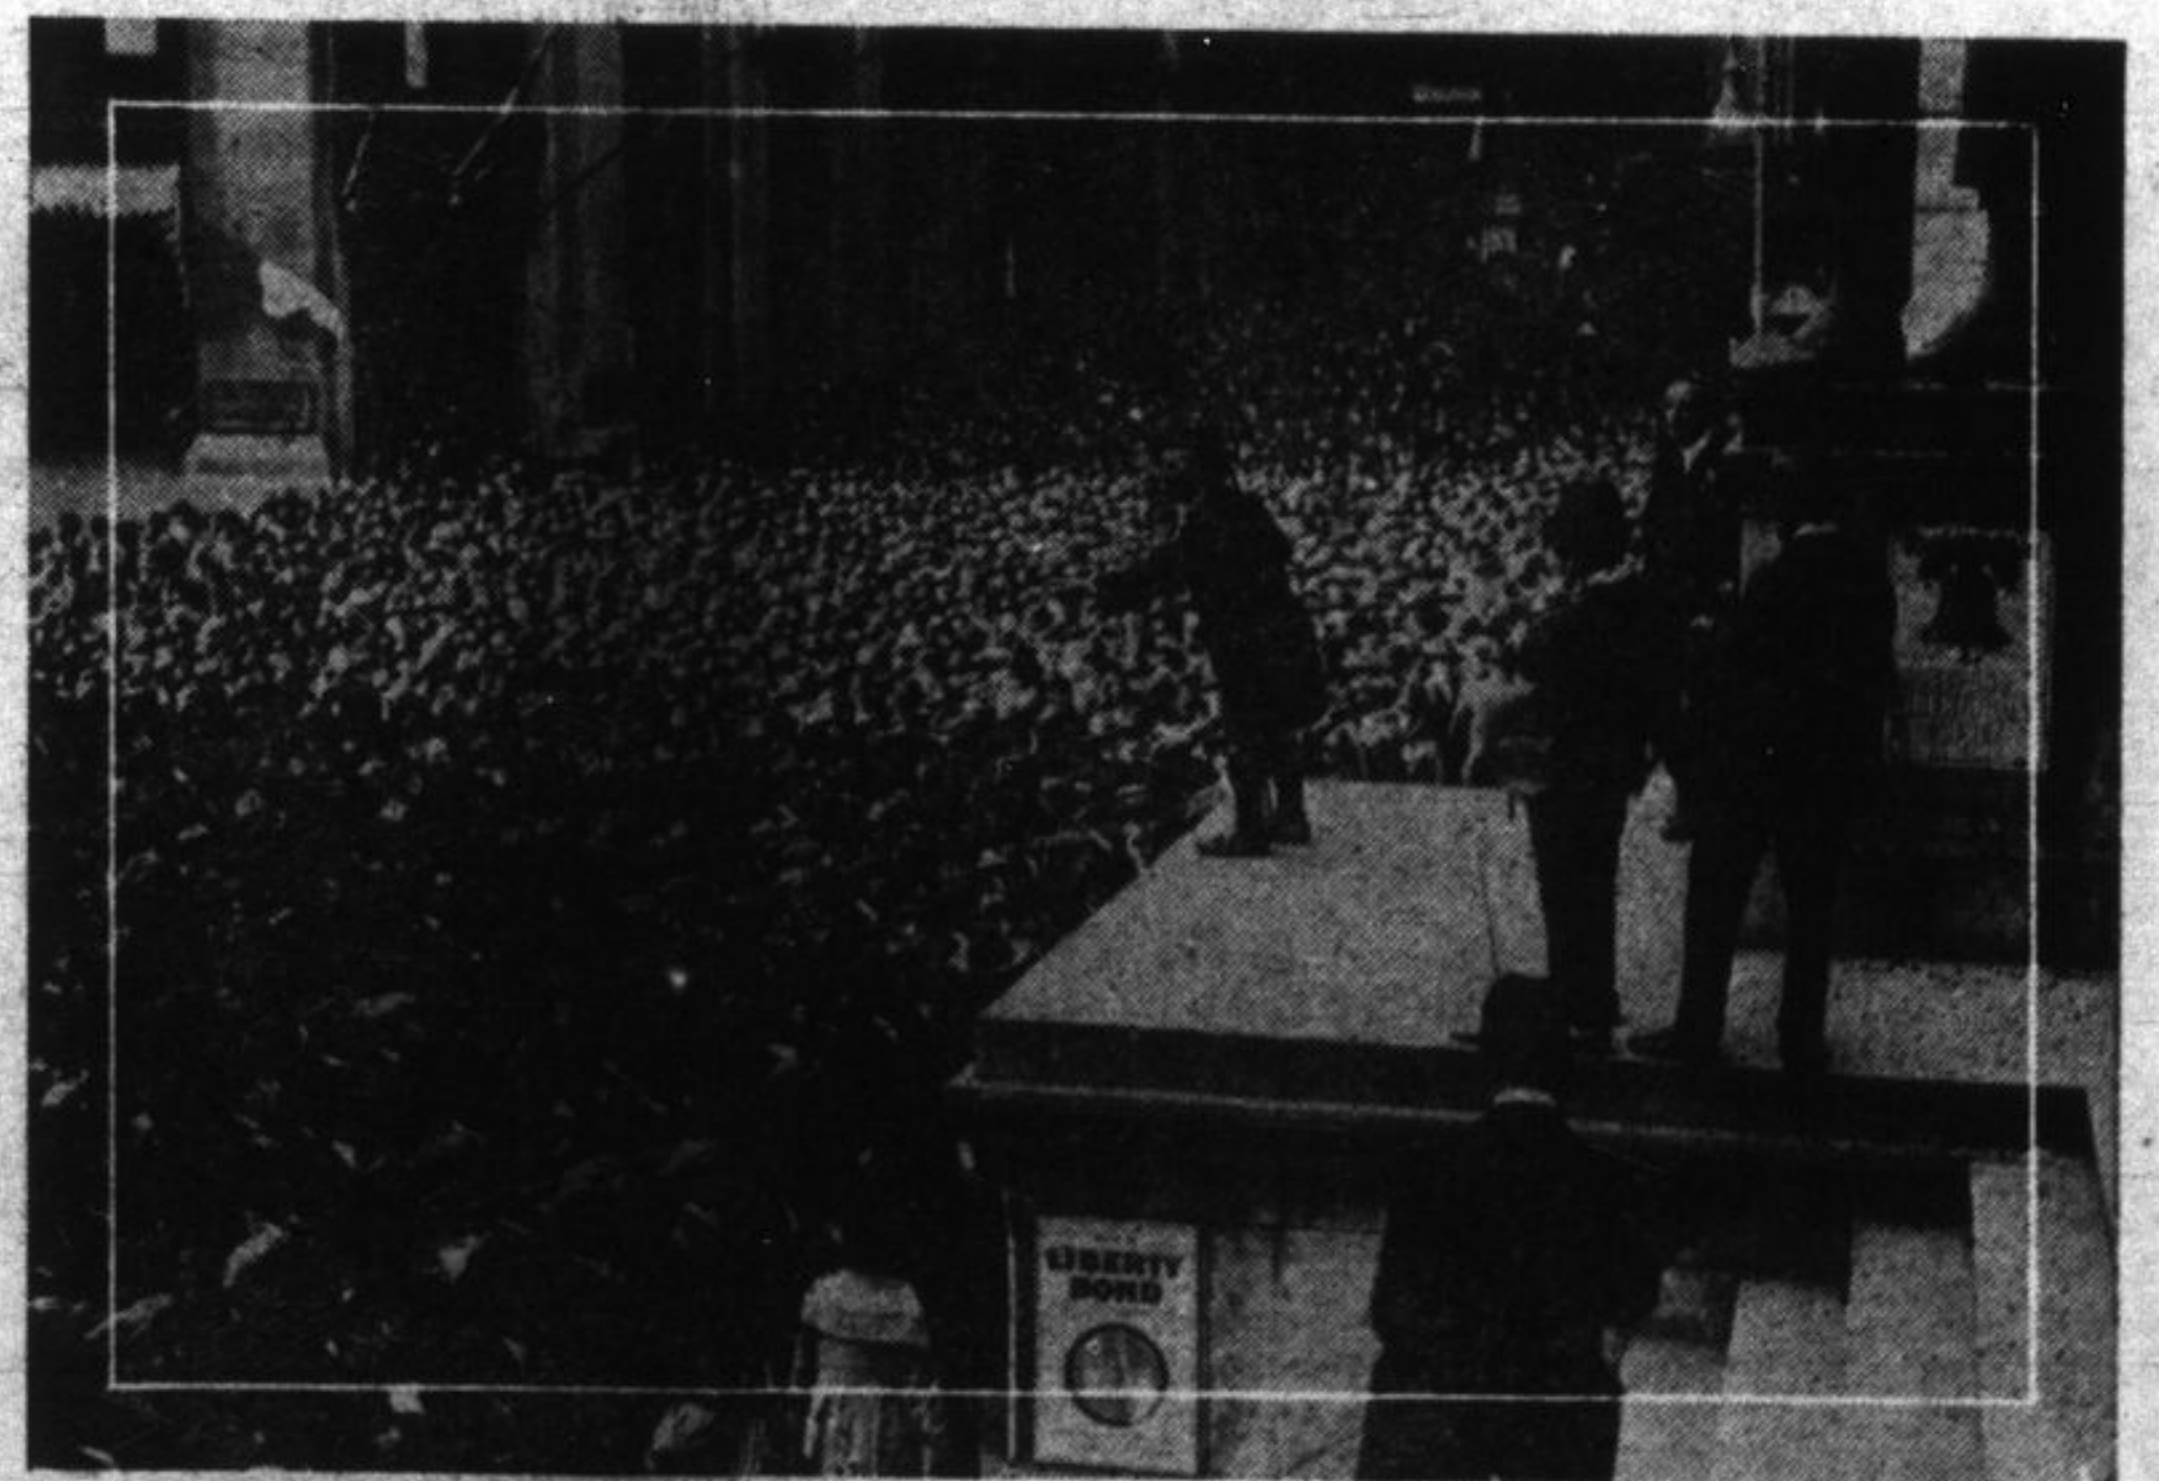

A French soldier's outfit. This soldier has a rifle, grenade-throwing gun, pistol, package of powder against gas, grenades in a basket, bag of sand, pickaxe, gun-grenades, signal lantern, alarm bell for gas attacks, barbed wire, rocket, scoop, corrugated iron hatch-grate, shovel, scissors, broom, periscope, gun-carrier with periscope and a gabion.

Canadian Commander in the field. General Sir A. W. Currie at a practice attack near the Canadian front.

Selling Liberty Bonds. Mrs. Simon Guggenheim, one of the leading society matrons of New York City, is shown selling Liberty Bonds in front of the Liberty Bank, in Madison Square. She sold $1,000,000 worth.

A busy hour during the Liberty Loan campaign in Wall Street. Harry Lander speaking from the balcony of the United States Sub-Treasury in New York to crowd of 100,000 in advocacy of the Liberty Loan.

The Canadians capture a machine gun emplacement. This is an official photograph taken recently near Lens.

Sergt. Major Arthur Hughson, of the Royal Canadian Engineers, who has been in service in France and Belgium since the beginning of the war. He learned the plumbing trade with Elliott Bros., of Kingston.

Power in the feet of new ally. The Minas Geraes, a Brazilian Dreadnought of over 19,000 tons, built in 1907.