The Theatres

At The Grand.
One of the most charming stars of the screen, Mabel Taliaferro, will be the featured attraction at the Grand to-night in the five-act Metro Wonderplay of love and mystery, "The Jury of Hate." The story is placed in the Canadian mountains. There are beautiful views of the St. Lawrence river and the Thousand Islands. Into this natural background fits perfectly the winsome personality of Jeane Labordie (Mabel Taliaferro) contrasted with which is that of her wilful, sickly brother, Jacques, also played by the versatile star. Remarkable photography shows brother and sister at the same time, by a clever use of double exposure. Miss Taliaferro will be remembered for her excellent work in "Peggy," the "Will of the Wisp," "A Madeline of the Hills," etc. An entire new programme of short subjects and the Pathe News will be given, while Houston and Vallerie will render an entire different repertoire of songs from some of Gilbert and Sullivan's famous old operas.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt.
Sarah Bernhardt, the world's greatest artists, will come to the Grand Opera House next Friday, Nov. 23rd, for an engagement of one night only, with her own company from the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt, Paris, and her own complete production, costumes and scenery.

The advent of this great artist, acclaimed super-woman, should prove one of the biggest social and dramatic events of the season. William F. Connor has added to the entertainment a galaxy of well-known instrumental and vocal artists, notably: Annie Louise David, harpist; "Gems of Art," Jean Duval and company; Albert Donnelly; Florence Hardman, violinist; and Rome Fulton, tenor.

Mme. Bernhardt will be seen here as the imperious queen of Egypt, who chooses to die the Empress of Egypt rather than the slave of Marc Antony, whose conquering Roman soldiers have overpowered her people. The mountains and setting are richly oriental, and the scene on the terrace of the Nile is one of the most beautiful productions from her own Paris theatre. Her Cleopatra is a triumph of emotional expression.

Mme. Bernhardt will then appear later in the evening as Fortia in the trial scene of "The Merchant of Venice," one of her most popular bills, as the story and even the words of this play are well known to thousands of playgoers.

"Lilac Time."
Not a little of the charm of Jane Cowell's play, "Lilac Time," which comes to the Grand Opera House, next Monday, Nov. 26th, for one night, direct from its record run at the Park Square Theatre, Boston, is in its dialogue, in the writing of which the authors have been very successful in developing the mood of the scene in the speeches of the characters engaged. This is notably true of the love story which concerns the little French girl, "Jeannette," and Philip Blythe, of the English Army.

Blythe has left London under a cloud, and has innocently suffered in order to protect the good name of a comrade. The sympathetic bond between him and the little French girl, is apparent early in the play. The pair meet at twilight in the garden, where the air is rich with the fragrance of lilac.

"Lilac Time" is frankly a play of love. The war is merely the background, the invisible force that jangles with the individuals, sweeps away plans, intensifies human motions as a few drops of some powerful essence change the nature of an entire bowl.

At The Strand.
To-night is the last opportunity that patrons of the Strand will have of seeing Theda Bara in "The Serpent." This story of Russian peasant life in which she plays the part of a daughter of a serf furnishes her with an admirable setting for her talent, and the success which she has attained in this picture has won warm praise everywhere and has made it one that those who love good pictures cannot afford to miss.

In addition Miss Mary McAllister in the last episode of "The Children Count" is shown and has attracted much attention. Comedy reels of a high class, round out this splendid programme.

At Griffin's.
Mary Pickford's crowning achievement, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" again attracted a capacity audience to Griffin's last evening, who went away feeling that this latest contribution of Mary's to the screen was indeed the most charming and humorous in which she has ever appeared. To-night will be the last opportunity given to see this truly wonderful photoplay. Lillian Walker in our other feature picture "Indiscretion," was also a decided favorite last night. This picture presents a distinctly different theme than most pictures similar in name, and is well worth seeing. This picture will also be given a final exhibition this evening.

Military News

MEDICAL STUDENTS TO BE EXEMPTED.
The following instructions have issued to the military representatives acting on the exemption tribunals: "Until further advised, you will exempt medical, dental and veterinary students who will complete their courses within the next 18 months. Those who have longer than this period to qualify in their professions will be treated the same as other men."

Realizing the number of young Canadians who are now proudly wearing the khaki, Ottawa has had to relax some of the regulations debarring men in military uniforms from attending public meetings. The latest orders from militia headquarters say that members of the Canadian forces may attend meetings while they are wearing the King's uniform, provided the meetings are not held in camps, barracks, or military quarters.
