

Jerusalem the Golden, as It Appears to Twentieth Century Eyes

The Holy City as seen from the Mount of Olives, looking across the Kedron Valley, with the city wall showing to the right.

The Via Dolorosa in Jerusalem. It was over this narrow street that Christ carried the cross and just beyond this point that he fell for the first time under the heavy burden.

Pilgrim entering the old city by Damascus Gate, one of the dominating entrances.
Brown & Dawson

The Tower of David and another view of the walls of old Jerusalem. The tower was named after the most famous warrior in Biblical history. Badly battered by time, it is still intact.

The shepherds at the manger in Bethlehem—"and the angel said unto them, * * * And this shall be a sign unto you. Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." St. Luke, ii. 10, 21, 22.

The Pool of Hezekiah, named in honor of the pious King of Judah, who prayed for divine intervention when the Assyrians attacked his city. The Lord answered his prayer by sending an angel who slew "a hundred and fourscore and five thousand" of the enemy.