The Theatres

At the Grand.

To-night will be the last chance to see popular Harold Lockwood in his greatest picture, "Paradise Garden." This special seven-act Metro Wonderplay continues to delight capacity audiences at the Grand and another capacity audience is assured for its final presentation to-night. It is the story of a man who has never seen a girl. One day he meets pretty Una Haberton. She is a girl of the right sort. He also meets a girl of the opposite type, whose one idea in life is to tease and lead on—and cause trouble. He imagines himself in love with her, until one day he receives a rude awakening. The conclusion is reached after a series of startling incidents and must be seen to be thoroughly appreciated. Rothrock and McGrade offer an entirely new programme and provide fifteen minutes of high-class entertainment. There is also the Pathé News, a good comedy, and a very interesting picture showing the training of the United States soldiers.

Elsa Ryan in "Out There."

"Out There," the thrilling play which will be presented by arrangement with Klav and Erlanger and George C. Tyler at the Grand Opera House, for two nights commencing next Friday, January 4th, with a matinee Saturday, occupies a field quite singular and alone. It is not a war play in the common acceptance of the phrase "war play," in that it does not contain shooting or even the echo of a battle, and yet its big scene takes place in a hospital near the front "somewhere in France," and its characters are either of the war or are concerned directly in the war. It might be described as a study in patriotism in out of the way places, how the love of country and the desire to do her bit affected a simple, unlettered girl, a drudge in a London tenement house, and how she rose to heroism through only the help in a hospital. Elsa Ryan was the first actress after Miss Taylor to play the title role in "Peg O' My Heart," and she performed the character in the large cities over one thousand times. Miss Ryan is surrounded by an English company, especially chosen because of fitness for the types to be represented. The original New York scenery, properties, lighting equipment and costumes, accompany the production.

At the Strand.

Official photographs of the Halifax disaster will be exhibited at the Strand for the first three days of next week. These pictures were taken under the supervision of the British and Canadian Governments. A panoramic view of Halifax taken ten days before the explosion shows a marked contrast between the present heap of ruins and the former prosperity of this unfortunate city. The explosion was no respecter of persons or buildings, for houses, schools, factories and offices alike are shown reduced to a debris of scattered wood and masonry with a kitchen stove or a stray shoe giving an added touch of pathos to the scene. The North End station shows as a deserted wreck to freight terminals buried in snow or with an occasional engine or line of freight cars frozen to the sidings. The photographs of a ruined foundry, a sugar refinery and a printing establishment closely resemble the war pictures taken somewhere in France after a period of German occupancy. Ethel Clayton in a five-part feature photoplay, "A Man's Woman," and a comedy and topical reels will also be shown.

At Griffin's.

An enthusiastic audience again assembled at Griffin's last night, and were unanimous in their praise of the great love story, "The Judgment House," which is the main feature. This story contains all the human emotions in parade, love, fickleness, pride, bravery, sacrifice, and element of passions. Thrills galore, suspense enthralling. It is a picturization of the world-renowned novel of the same name written by the great British novelist, Sir Gilbert Parker. It is a picture you cannot afford to miss.

Virginia Pearson, in "The Wrath of Love," is also another good feature, and proved highly attractive last evening. It is a screen drama with a novel angle and a thrilling, fast moving story of the times.

Pearl White, the beautiful serial star in the fourth episode of "The Fatal King," was another added attraction, and she is unusually beautiful and clever in this chapter.

This well balanced and high class programme will be given a final exhibition this evening.

The Late Allan McDonald.

On Friday evening, Dec. 28th, 1917, Allan E. McDonald, son of Roderick McDonald, died at his home, 29 Pembroke street, after a lingering illness. Deceased, thirty-seven years of age, resided in this city the greater part of his life, and was a veteran of the South African war. Besides his parents he is survived by three sisters, Misses Mary, Katie and Irene, and one brother, Roderick, all at home.

Familiar Quotations

So long as faith with freedom reigns
And loyal hope survives,
And gracious charity remains,
To heaven Jovely lives;
While there is one untrodden tract
For intellect or will,
And men are free to think and act,
Life is worth living still.
