The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

USELESS BROODING

CHAPTER XVII.

All the next day I brooded over what my callers had said—and my mind. I did not understand such talk at all, yet I knew there was more meant than I had grasped. I was not silly enough to suppose an attractive man like George had never paid attention to any one but me. Or that he perhaps hadn't had some sort of love affairs. Although he had told me that he had never asked anyone to marry him.

I recalled that day. It was about a week after we became engaged. I had told him I loved him; and asked him some questions about his bachelor days, simple little questions a girl like myself would naturally ask. "Had he ever cared for anyone else?" etc. He had answered by saying: "I have never asked anyone to marry me. Howard, isn't that answer enough to your question?" and I had taken it to mean that he had never loved anyone else. Perhaps men might care a lot for someone, yet for some reason not want to marry them. Oh, his life was so complicated! So different from the simple life at home. There seemed always an uncertainty. Always things were just beyond my depth. And Madge Loring said such unsettling things. I couldn't ask George about things, especially things connected with his life before I knew him. He would frown angrily, call it catechising, tell me he had never endured it and never would; that it irritated him greatly. So instead of talking things out, brooded over them, more perhaps than was good for me.

A Faint Understanding.
I had lived with George about eight months. I was beginning to understand him better, to see the strength of his passions, the quality of his moods, the weakness of his nature. I was beginning to realize that he had been two men to me: the man I loved and married and understood; and the man I loved and did not understand, save faintly. It was the sort of feeling one has when they haven't seen a person for a long time and in the interim they have developed unknown qualities—qualities which puzzle and which seem to hold you away from them.

But such times were now growing to be almost things of the past. Sometimes he would push me away, gently, with a remark that he was in no mood for nonsense. Or he would look so severe, be so cold and distant that I had not the heart to try to show my love for him; else was afraid to. Then he would stay out so many evenings. He belonged to several clubs, and whenever we were not engaged for dinner or the theatre he would go to some club and remain until after I had gone to bed.

A Half Love Not Enough.
I often wondered if I possessed even the half of what I gave in love to George. I knew that half would not satisfy me, yet was not sure that even so much was mine. Ever since the day that Madge Loring had drawn the curtain of George's past life just a bit aside, I had been in a sort of doubting state that made me most uncomfortable.

Then too when we went out in the evening, or had anyone at the house, they talked about operas, the latest society sensation, some new dancer, or singer. Talked in such a way as to shut me out. It chagrined, and frightened me. I longed to grasp quickly the things that George seemed so to admire in others. I was willing to learn anything if only it would help me, teach me how to hold my husband.

Usually too, George would praise these older women. Praise them unstintedly. But scarcely ever did he praise me; and when he did, it attached so much importance to it that instead of comforting me, it made me unhappy, while I waited for the next time when he should be pleased, but which was so long in coming.

I felt that I wasn't suited to these people, to his world. I did not understand them. And sometimes I thought I never would. I cried and worried a good deal. Would it always be so? I must learn to control myself better. I would I used to declare vehemently.

Sometimes I thought of how my girl friends said they envied me, marrying a rich man and going to live in a city. I wondered if they would, if they knew how lonely I was. How alone.

Then, too, I had a feeling that George wasn't always at the club wheel as a nurse with me. His intuition told me that he was often I felt sure that he was with those old friends of his instead of with me.

The best remedy is one you can easily make at home, but very effective.

Thousands of people normally healthy in every other respect, are annoyed with a persistent hacking or bronchial cough year after year. It disturbs their sleep and makes life disagreeable. It's so needless—there's an old home-made remedy that will end such a cough easily and quickly.

Gradually but surely you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether, thus ending a cough that you never thought would end. It also promptly loosens a dry or tight cough, stops the troublesome throat tickle, soothes the irritated membranes that line the throat and bronchial tubes, and relieves cough almost immediately. A day's use will usually break up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and for bronchitis, asthma, whooping cough and bronchial catarrh, there is nothing better. It tastes pleasant and keeps perfectly.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract and is used by millions of people every year for throat and chest cures with splendid results.

"Danderine" Will Save Your Hair and Double Its Beauty at Once.

Try This! Your Hair Gets Soft, Wavy, Abundant and Glossy at Once.

Save your hair! Beautify it! It is only a matter of using a little Danderine occasionally to have a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, wavy and free from dandruff. It is easy and inexpensive to have pretty, charming hair and lots of it. Just spend a few cents for a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance; freshness, suppleness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will, you can not find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp. Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower, destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp, and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy, and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this.
