CHAPTER XLIV.

The next day Mrs. Sexton seemed particularly gracious, although she was still suffering. I could not resist the temptation to tell her of Mrs. Loring's call, and her unjust insinuations. I had told her, the night before, that I expected Merton Gray. "She was perfectly horrid! And the worst of it was, I didn't know what to say or do!" I declared emphatically.

"You see, you do need some of the poise your husband is so anxious you shall possess," she returned. "Poise is the only quality in a woman that makes her able to master such a situation, instead of the situation mastering her. You had done, were doing, nothing wrong; but because of your actions, she almost had the right to conclude that it was a deliberate plan for you and Merton Gray to spend an evening alone. I am sorry it happened—that Midge Loring was the one to call. I shall have to straighten it out for you, or she will say some mischievous thing to your husband."

"She is very—friendly with George. She always calls him by his given name," (her kindly response had made me want to unbosom myself further).

"She has known your husband for years," she returned, and the keen look that accompanied the words did not escape me.

No, Not Jealous.

"Yes, I know—"

"I hope you are not allowing yourself to feel jealous of his old friends."

"No—not jealous. That isn't it."

MRS. SEXTON ADVISES.

Not-in the sense a woman is usually jealous. But there seems a side to him that I don't understand—that I don't even know—that these women, Mrs. Loring and Mrs. Collins, seem perfectly acquainted with. It is annoying, and often very embarrassing—and it may cause me to be jealous, when I understand," I added. Often I had wondered if there was anything between George and other women, especially since he had acted so impatient the only time I had dared question him.

"I should advise you not to even think of such a thing. No woman ever accomplished anything by jealousy." Men, as a rule, dislike a woman who gives way to it intensely. I should imagine your husband would be that kind of a man."

"But he does lots of things he wouldn't want me to do."

"That is childish. You are young, but you will have to learn—and the sooner the better—that the world has one code for a woman, another for a man. The world of society I mean. Because Mr. Howard does something, Mrs. Howard is given no license to do the same thing. Men, my dear Mrs. Howard, are privileged creatures—in many ways. They take care of the women they love, or honor, or desire; and, in return, they demand absolute liberty of action. Believe me, you will hold your husband far more surely by making him proud of you—by letting him see your superiority—than by being jealous and fault-finding, or aping the vulgar and declaring that 'what is sauce for the goose, is sauce for the gander,' and, consequently, losing his respect. That doesn't mean you are to sit at home and mope, or that you are never to accept any little attentions from others. But be sure you keep your skirts clean. Don't look so shocked. It isn't easy—always."

An Awakening.

I know, by this time, that marriage was not all happiness—all joy. My husband often seemed out of sympathy with me, and I had not always been an angel, not by any means. Yet, sometimes, the thought of his wooing would come with a bitter rush—the memory of his loved words, now so seldom heard. It was hard and bewildering, to have George so changed.

I wondered just how and why it was so. My thoughts would go back to our honeymoon; and I had an aching memory that even before that was over, I had sensed a change.

Slowly the feeling of something missing had taken possession of me. George was so proud; he wanted me to be so perfect. I felt as if he would like to have me put into some sort of a machine and kept there until I was turned out exactly in the shape he desired. It was a horrid feeling—that you were all wrong to the man who once made you feel you were all that was right.

With a sense of weight, almost unbearable, in my heart, I had set myself the task of making myself over—making of myself the woman George Howard wanted his wife to become; and to banish forever the girl he had married, and claimed—then—to—think perfect.

This WONDERFUL POLISH is as useful in the GARAGE as it is in the HOME

The ideal furniture polish also makes an ideal automobile polish. O-Cedar Polish successfully fulfills all the requirements of the motorist.

This is the polish most generally recommended by the men who know. Leading makers and dealers are telling its merits to car owners—telling them that the O-Cedar way is the easy, economical way of keeping the auto body practically like "new."

Wet a clean piece of cloth with water—and wring it until it is just moist. Pour on this damp cloth a few drops of O-Cedar; this will form a soft, harmless "lather" that quickly removes all dirt and grease. If there is mud on the body, wash it off first. Another way of using O-Cedar Polish for automobile is to put half O-Cedar and half water in a "sprayer." Before using shake sprayer to mix O-Cedar with water and then operate.

A brisk rubbing with a dry cloth completes the process.

O-Cedar does not "gum"; wiping off dry, it will never catch the dust.

MAPLE SUGAR IS WHITE

Color Almost That Of Cane Variety In District About Watertown.

Watertown, April 11.—Maple sugar makers throughout this section have discovered a peculiar situation this spring in the production of sugar.

The makers term this a "white year" as a result of the bleached appearance of the sugar. The cause of the light color is not known. In some sections the product has the usual dark brown color, but the color is not uniform throughout the North country.

Generally the owners of sugar "bushes" are having a good run of sap and the total production in Northern New York is expected considerably to exceed that of several years past.

It should be our endeavor to make our comforts and joys more than offset our troubles.

New potatoes are in the market, selling at two quarts for 25 cents.

Could Not Trace Him.

During the British advance on Jericho an enemy shell struck an ancient tomb and revealed a skeleton. Investigation by the official archeologists connected with the British staff pointed to the skeleton being that of an historical figure, John of Antioch. Accordingly a cable was despatched to the War Office in London: "Have discovered skeleton supposed to be that of John of Antioch."

The War Office replied: "Cannot trace John Antioch. Send identification disk."

Russian Prisoners as Tutors.

It is reported that in Germany several thousand women—selected for their youth, energy and attractiveness—are learning the Russian language. Their tutors are Russian prisoners, who are compelled to give them lessons. These students are intended to pursue, after the war, the occupation of travelling-saleswomen to capture the Russian markets, and descriptive catalogues of German goods are already being prepared in the Russian language for their use in that capacity.—Family Herald.

What a great and glorious world this would be if every man would follow the advice he gives to others.

See What This Man Says

Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey)
NUJOL Dept., 26 Broadway, New York City.

Dear Sir:—

I am a married man, and we have three children. My wife, like most other women—so the family physician tells me—suffers from constipation. With the first two we had great trouble while they were nursing, all because of the fact that it was necessary for my wife to take medicine for constipation, as a result of which the children not only suffered, but were pale and cross, until they were large enough to eat for themselves. With our last child the same trouble began, and the physician when called on for medicine, said "My! My! it's impossible to give anything that will not hurt the babe." This put me to thinking, and as I had used NUJOL, I finally persuaded my wife to try it, and it proved as I suspected. It relieved the mother without hurting or affecting the babe. As a result we have the healthiest, happiest child I ever saw.
