The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

CLOUDS AFTER SUNSHINE

CHAPTER XLIX
"The customer will send for those clothes I wore last night," George said the next morning. "Don't forget to take the buckles off my shoes. I'd hate to have them carried off, they are so comfortable."

We had slept late and I felt rather tired, even so. Yet as soon as the door closed after George, I went upstairs to attend to his request. I ripped the buckles from the shoes, and then started to fold the coat, when the thought came that I had better look through the pockets. George might have left a handkerchief in one of them.

I thrust my hand into one of the pockets and drew out the crumpled telegram. I smoothed it out and read:

"The bunch are to come up for supper. Join us." It was dated the night before and signed "J.C."

I immediately thought of what Mr. Carpenter had said to George when I lunched with George at the Elite Restaurant about "The Bunch"; it must be some of that crowd with whom George had been so intimate before I knew and married him. But who could have sent it? Then, all suddenly, the thought of that gay widow, Julia Collins, came to me. It must be she. But I had heard so much of "good form," of what was an art in polite society, and what was not, that I could but wonder at her lack of good taste—or so it seemed to me—in inviting a married man to an affair, and in ignoring his wife. At home such a thing was unknown.

That George had paid no attention to the summons, that he had not joined the "bunch" was comforting, until I remembered how often he remained out without my knowing anything about where he was. He probably had radically changed; I still resented the fact that she had been hired to coach me in my duties—me, a married woman. Yet she had proved herself right so often, and her real help with my dinner had been so kindly given, that I had now a certain respect for her, her opinion, that insensibly influenced my thoughts of her.

I burned the scraps and tried to think no more about it. But either because I was weak, or because I was too young to have yet learned to control vagrant thoughts, I could not wholly dismiss the matter. Even when Evelyn came over to talk about my dinner, it still intruded.

Evelyn is Enthusiastic.
"It was wonderful! Simply wonderful! I had a heavenly time. So did the rest. And didn't everyone look lovely? Really, Helen, I don't think there's a person in Moreland could have done any better, and in some things not as well. I had luncheon with Kurt's mother. I can't just call her "mother"; it sticks in my throat. Not that I do not like her; but she is so dignified and cold, not "motherly" a bit. But she was quite nice today. She thawed out considerably while I told of your lovely decorations, and the menu. And you should have seen her when I told her that Merton Gray painted your place cards. Her face was a study in expression. I can tell you. I had to promise her to take ours over for her to look at. I'm sure she will ask him to do some for her, at her next dinner, and if he refuses I don't know what she will do."

"I am afraid he will refuse. You know he gave me mine."

"Yes—that is part of the wonder. He gets perfectly fabulous prices you know."

"I'm going to frame mine, and George's too," I told her.

"A good idea! I'll frame ours. We'll go together and get some dainty frames for them." Then:

Evelyn Admires George.
"Your husband looked stunning! I should think you'd be awfully proud of him. He is an awfully handsome man. And in that costume he was irresistible."

"He did look well, didn't he?"

"I should say he did! Jane Lawson raved about him all the way home, and Olive Rivers said she never had danced with a more fascinating dancer and that he talked as well as he danced."

After Evelyn left, I recalled what she had said, and it gave me quite a thrill of pleasure to know that George had thought my guests worth talking to. I knew how well he could talk—if he wanted to.

(To be continued.)

DAYLIGHT SAVING.
Contributed.
Last night I went and spiked my clock. Shoved her one hour ahead, just like the papers told us to. Because the Government said that daylight saving was good. The summer for to stay. So I just shoved her up a notch To even up the day.

Before she come I wake at five. To work at six I be.
But now she here, I wake at four—How like you to be me?
I no like early to get up.
To rise before the sun.
But I must do what I no like.
Since daylight saving's come.

But now she here, why I no care She all the same to me.
Fore where I work 'till six before, I quit at five now, see.
So spike your clock as I have done, Then she'll be right begun.
If not you'll be behind the times, Since daylight saving's come.

There is a fellow named Harry Newman,
Who hit on a light saving plan.
Since it came into force,
This fellow of course,
Must feel like a brand new man.

The initials of H. W. Newman, sponsor for daylight saving, mean Hour Went Nicely.

Quick, Harmless Way To Remove Wrinkles
Springtime brings wrinkles to many sensitive skins that are much exposed to winds and changing temperatures. To make an effective wrinkle remover, mix an ounce of powdered saxolite and a half pint witch hazel. Bathe the face in the solution—immediately every wrinkle is affected. It acts wonderfully on sagging facial muscles, also, the lesion possessing remarkable astringent and tonic properties. Use it once a day for a while and see how it will improve your facial contour.

This simple lotion can not harm the most delicate skin. The treatment itself leaves no trace, no one guesses the secret of your increasing youthful appearance. But be sure to ask the druggist for the powdered saxolite.

Simple Way To End Dandruff
There is one sure way, that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.
