AN ABSORBING QUESTION

CHAPTER LIV.

George had telephoned that he was going to the theatre. That was the way he always did. He said he was to do this or that—never asked me if I would like to.

But this time he was not coming home after me; I was to meet him at the Elite restaurant for dinner. What I should wear was an absorbing question. If I didn't look just to George would be cross. Finally, I decided risking his displeasure in another way. I would call him up and ask him what I should wear. He had warned me never to call him during business hours. When we were first married I used to call him occasionally, but it had been months since I had ventured.

"I'd like to speak to Mr. Howard," I said in an uncertain voice, when his private secretary answered.

"Who is calling?"

"Hold the wire please."

"Hello," it was George.

"Oh, George, I didn't think to ask you what I should wear!"

"And is that what you disturbed me for?" an impatience he took no pains to disguise in his voice.

haven't the faintest idea what to wear."

Suddenly I thought of Mrs. Sexton. She would know.

"Please tell me what I shall wear?" I asked her, after I had explained the situation on the telephone.

"Is your husband going to dress?"

"I don't know! He isn't coming home. I am to meet him at the restaurant."

"Well, to be on the safe side, wear one of your best afternoon gowns. One a little low in the neck. Then dress your hair with extra care, and I am sure Mr. Howard can find no fault."

I was not so sure; but I thanked her and immediately ran up stairs to tell Celeste to lay out a dress which George had once said was becoming.

"Madame is not going in evening dress?" she asked.

"No, Celeste, not tonight. But Celeste I want to look my very best, so take great pains with my hair."

"Oui, Madame!"

A Satisfactory Result.

When I was dressed I really looked very nice. My dress was an old blue satin and chiffon, trimmed with delicate hand embroidery.

Of course I had to wear a hat, but I very carefully adjusted the big floppy black hat with a blue facing to match my dress. It was a hat George particularly liked and which I had worn when out with him once before.

"Madame looks very well," Celeste remarked as she held my coat for me. "Monsieur cannot help being pleased."

I had not mentioned George, but

An Unpleasant Moment.

"But I thought you would want me to look nice, and I didn't know whether you wanted me to wear evening dress or not—"

"I shall be glad when the time comes that you have a mind of your own! wear what you please, but see that you look well," and the click of the receiver told me that he had cut me off.

"Oh, dear!" I said aloud, as I moved away from the telephone. Why couldn't he have told me? I Celeste's remark showed she was not unaware of my anxiety to look well when going out with him.

When the car drew up to the curb in front of the restaurant, George was just going in. Knowing his promptness, his impatience when he was delayed, I had timed myself exactly.

He gave me a quick, appraising look, and his face relaxed. He was satisfied with my appearance. I would try to be tactful. I would say nothing about the telephone conversation to remind him of anything disagreeable.

Our dinner was delicious. George was really nice and kind and I gave myself up to the unusual pleasure, dismissing all other thoughts.

We arrived at the theatre just as the curtain went up. Our seats were in the fifth row on the aisle. We usually had a box, but I liked the orchestra seats better; I could see without being stared at by everyone in the house. It invariably made me uncomfortable.

The play was a delightful comedy drama, and once more George was in good spirits. His laugh rang out often, and several times he looked at me with an approving nod. Suddenly I noticed an uneasy movement around us; then an acid smell. Then someone screamed "Fire!" and in a moment, instead of a quiet audience, there was a fighting, struggling mass of frightened people rushing for the exits. I sensed in a way, that someone on the stage was talking, that the curtain had rung down, and that was all. The smoke was thick, I felt a choking sensation, then someone lifted me high, and I knew I was being carried in strong arms.

THE GERMAN ARMY.

How the Reinforcements From Russia Will Be Used.

The German army is taking advantage of the reinforcements it has been able to bring to the western front from Russia to effect a re-organization on formation in order to strengthen the fighting units, says a cable despatch to the New York Tribune. At the beginning of the war the German army was organized in powerful masses, but as the fighting reduced the number in size until sixteen divisions, which contained 42,000 men of all arms at the beginning of the war, became 16,000.

The Echo de Paris gives the following as the new organization of the German battalion:

A staff, comprising a commander, two aids, a quartermaster and a chief medical officer.

Four companies of infantry, each with a complement of lightweight machine guns.

A machine gun company with four officers, eighty-five enlisted men and non-commissioned officers and twelve heavy machine guns.

A mine thrower detachment with eight mine throwers.

Necessary transport.

It is not evident as yet whether they are going to return to the former system of four battalions to the regiment and four regiments to the brigade, but even if they do not, they have strengthened the division by not less than 5,000 and thus brought it up again very close to 20,000.

Le Temps describes the present method by which a German battalion advances to a attack as follows:

"At the moment the artillery barrage is lifted from the opposing first line trenches, a detachment comprising one machine gun and a complement of grenade throwers leaves the German line and advances into No Man's Land. The machine gun is placed at a point that will command the enemy lines while the grenade throwers go on to where they can throw their grenades into the trenches. German prisoners who have explained this formation say that it gives excellent results, as the grenade throwers can often clean up the front line trench before the main body of the battalion leaves the trenches and thus it is not held up in its charge.

"The assaulting columns in the German army are not provided with arm munitions for only a quick, sharp fight. The machine gun men carry a revolver and sixteen cartridges and a bayonet each, while they have only 1,000 or 1,500 cartridges for the gun. The grenadiers have each a rifle and bayonet with sixteen cartridges and twenty grenades. They wear rubber-soled shoes to walk noiselessly. The machine gun men and grenade throwers are all under thirty years of age and are men who were athletes before the war."

MILKING COWS.

In No Man's Land Amidst Singing of Bullets.

With the British Armies in France, April 23.—A curious incident has been reported from the Merrille sector. A few days ago a large herd of cows, which had been abandoned, was still grazing in No Man's Land between Nieppe Forest and Merrille. The British Tommies sat in their defences for a long time, speculating longingly how fresh milk would taste. Finally the desire for milk became overpowering. Some hardy pioneers ventured forth with tins and amidst the singing of bullets, milked the cows. Doing dairy work in No Man's Land these days is the task of a man.

FIRED AS MANY SHELLS

In Three Hours As In The Whole War of 1870.

Paris, April 23.—An idea of the gigantic struggle can be gained when it is said that the Germans in three hours fired 1,500,000 shells. They could not have done this without the help of captured British and Russian guns and shells. In the whole war of 1870 only 1,500,000 shells were fired from either side.

To Evacuate Prisoners.

Moscow, April 23.—Replying by wireless telegraphy to-day to the German Government, M. Tchitcherin, the Bolshevik foreign minister, said that measures were being taken for the speedy evacuation of German war prisoners from eastern Siberia.

An Overbouse Without Sleeves.

girl who knits is the sleeveless overbouse for the girl who sews. It is a charming little model that may be developed in satin or velvet and may be worn becomingly with any frock. The neck may be cut in a deep or shallow V, or in square effect. The fullness at the waistline is held in with the sash which is tacked over the plait in front and at the underarm seams, crossed in back and tied in front. This arrangement, however, may be changed to suit the fancy of the wearer. In medium size the blouse requires 2 1/2 yards 36-inch material.

As there are only five pieces to the pattern, each of which is cut in duplicate, however, the cutting is a very simple process. The material is folded carefully in half as the first step; after which the back is laid near the lengthwise fold, with large "O" perforations on a lengthwise thread. The pockets come next, with large "O" perforations on a lengthwise thread, then the front, with triple "TTT" perforations on the lengthwise fold. The sash is placed parallel with the selvaige edge, large "O" perforations on the lengthwise fold.

If the neck is desired in deep V outline in front with square effect at the back, the front and back should be cut along indicating small "o" perforations. The length of the overbouse may be changed to suit the individual fancy. Frequently a touch of embroidery is added to the front or sash to increase the effectiveness of the mode.
