The Theatres

At the Grand.

In "The Strong Way," which will be shown at the Grand for the last time to-night, beautiful June Elvidge is starred, and she is at her brilliant best in this attraction. The drama is of New York life among the very wealthy. We see a famous New York cabaret, with its ice skating revue in full blast, and we see other glimpses of rich New Yorkers spending their money, which is all shown very interestingly. The photography in this offering is just what it is claimed to be—wonderful. The scenes, both interiors and exteriors, are things of beauty seldom seen on the screen. "The Strong Way" is the sort of a story that always interests. It has a number of incidents which are startling, to say the least, and the big climax, which comes at the critical moment, is driven home in a commanding, convincing manner by the splendid cast selected for this production. The Pathe News and comedy reels, along with a beautiful reel of scenic film, will complete the picture bill. The vaudeville, Les Valadons, in a novelty wire act, is a splendid act.

"The Brat."

MacMillan, the gifted son of a wealthy metropolitan family, has a turn for writing novels on sociological topics and wanders through the slums to find subjects. On one of these expeditions he runs across a bright girl waltz of the street who has been arrested for the first time on a charge of begging. He secures her release and in order to study the under world, short range takes her to his mother's elegant home, where her position is that of part servant and part guest, and where she is given plenty to eat and which she prizes even more, a stock of fashionable clothes.

The book that the novelist finished with the waltz as an inspiration proved a "best seller." Then he proposes to cast the girl adrift on the world again without anything in the way of reward. What happens then will be shown during the production of "The Brat" at the Grand Opera House on Saturday, May 4th, matinee and night.

At Griffin's.

Douglas Fairbanks in his new Art-craft picture "Headin' South," was a decided favorite with the audience last evening, who assembled at this popular playhouse to see the international star in one of the most unique as well as one of the most distinctive plays of the season. In this picture Douglas undertakes some hair-raising "stunts" with his feet, pony "smiles" and the photoplay bristles with action from start to finish. Through the riot of thrills and adventure that run in "Headin' South," a love romance stands out. There is a wide diversity of scenery in the picture, and great ensembles of mounted men. No one who loves a good photoplay, or who admires a great and beautiful artist, like Jewel Carmen, should miss seeing this gifted star in "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes," which highly delighted the audience last evening. This photoplay gives Miss Carmen a splendid opportunity to exhibit not only her beauty but also her talent. It is a thrilling story of how love changes a thief into a noble being. Don't miss these special attractions this evening.

A Daughter of Uncle Sam.

In this new thrilling serial for patriotic handiemes, there is a splendid red-blooded strain of romance to be found throughout the whole twelve chapters. This most remarkable serial "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," abounds in exciting thrilling action and encounters which have resulted from conflicts between American patriots and German secret agents, who have been striving to interfere with "Uncle Sam's" great war machine. First episode at the King Edward to-night and Saturday. To-night, Bobby Connolly picture. Usual admission.

Home On Furlough.

Among the soldiers who returned to Kingston on Tuesday was Gunner William Gibb, who enlisted in August, 1914, in the 3rd Battery, 1st Brigade, under command of the late Lieut.-Col. Russell Britton, and went overseas in September. His brigade reached France on Feb. 15th, 1915. Gunner Gibb wears four chevrons. He was never wounded, but was three times sent to the base with rheumatism, lumbago and trench fever. He is now on furlough and is expected to report in England on May 22nd.

The date for the North Oxford Liberal convention to select a candidate has been changed from June 14th to May 9th.
